LENOIR HIGH

Carolina-Virginia game only when the game took place in Chapel Hill, the band began making the trip to Charlottesville, Va., when the game was played there. Their first appearance in Charlottesville found them marching and playing in a blizzard with their feet sinking into snow and icicles hanging from their instruments. On their last trip there in 1942, the Lenoir Band was assigned a very important part in the exercises honoring the 50th football game between Carolina and Virginia and also honoring the alumni of both institutions serving in the armed forces.

When war restrictions were placed on travel and the Carolina-Virginia game was moved to Norfolk, the Lenoir Band made its first break in the traditional trips to the games and began to devote its services to parades and concerts helpful to the war effort. During that time one trip was made to Chapel Hill to give a special concert for Navy and Marine personnel on the campus and also to play at the Carolina-Duke game.

But now that travel is again possible, the band is to be back bigger and better than ever and ready to add its playing and marching to the color of the game. Their work on the sidelines as well as on the field will be up to traditional standards of past years.
