FOOTBALL

a beautiful interception of the aerial on the Tar Heel 30 to end the threat and give Carolina the ball. Three running plays gave Carolina a first down on its own 43, and on the fourth play after the interception, Warren faded back and threw to Bill Pritchard, who made a spectacular running catch on the 25 and ran the rest of the way unmolested for the 13-0 tally. He bobbed the pigskin momentarily but held on to the 32-yard aerial to score.

Cox again booted the point, 13 minutes and 20 seconds into the first period.

The second quarter went scoreless with Virginia pushing to the Carolina 10 once only to be held on downs.

Carolina got the ball on its own 30 after the halftime kickoff, and with little Bill Voris carrying the ball for three first downs and Jim Camp for one, the ball was again put in position for scoring. Camp again took the ball on a reverse and fell over the goal for the touchdown. The kick was blocked this time, 20-0, four minutes of the third period gone.

After the kickoff, Virginia made a first down on its own 37, and on the third play from scrimmage Ray Brown slipped through the Tar Heel line and past the secondary into the clear, racing 61 yards for a touchdown. The kick was wide, making it 20-6.

The second Virginia TD was set up on a bad punt from behind the Tar Heel goal, the ball being run back to the Carolina 26. A 15-yard penalty against Carolina for unnecessary roughness put the ball on the 15, and in two plays, Fray went around end for the score. Again the conversion failed.

Carolina started from its own 27 for the final touchdown, making five consecutive first downs, on running plays by Voris, Warren and B. K. Grow. Warren went over from the six-inch line just three minutes from the end of the game. Cox kicked good.

On the fourth play after taking the kickoff, Virginia's Caine passed to Fray in the clear on the Carolina 25 for another score. The try for the point was again bad, two minutes from the finish of the game.

Carolina made two first downs in a row just as the fray came to a close, adding more to the Tar Heel high scrimmage total. Thus ended the final game, the fifth win, and the 1945 season was over.

COACH BOB

Coach Bob had to give up football, due to his increasing administrative burdens, but the "Dean of Southern Track", who has produced 11 outdoor and 10 indoor Conference championship teams, still clings to his first love.

Mr. Fetzer has probably done more than any other man in the South to promote track, intramurals, and his guiding policy of "athletics for all." Carolina's Football History ranks him and the late Charles T. Woolen as the "fathers of modern athletics" here, and the student body, out of its deep admiration and affection for him recently dedicated to him one of its year-books.

Hazlett Voices Objections To Proposed Service Merger

By Darley Lochner

Although Capt. Edward E. Hazlett, commanding officer of the Naval and Marine units here, is a lifelong friend and staunch admirer of General Dwight D. Eisenhower, he still does not believe in the merger of the armed forces, even if General Eisenhower were elected to head the combined group.

"As an old Navy man I am still pretty much convinced that the Navy can best be handled, even in the higher echelons, by those thoroughly versed in the value and uses of sea power," said Captain Hazlett. "This is one of the few things that I cannot go along entirely with General Eisenhower."

The friendship between Captain Hazlett and General Eisenhower dates back to boyhood days in Abilene, Kan., where both men were born and spent their boyhood. Captain Hazlett said that he was delighted that General Eisenhower had been chosen as chief of staff and that he could think of "no safer or more capable hands to guide the military destiny of this nation."

The author of a recently published boys book about submarine life, "Rig For Depth Charges", Captain Hazlett plans to live in Chapel Hill and write more books about Navy life after his retirement in December. He is well equipped to do this having served in the Navy since 1911 when he entered the Naval Academy at Annapolis.

Graduating in 1915, he was an officer on battle ships, submarines and other stations until his retirement in 1939. At the close of World War I Captain Hazlett and his detachment of 200 men were sent to Split, Salmatia, to receive the surrender of the Austro-Hungarian battleship, Zrinyi.

He was commanding officer of the ship for seven months.

After being in retirement for less than a year he was reassigned to active duty as an instructor at the Naval Academy. Captain Hazlett and his family came to Chapel Hill in August, 1944.

The Hazletts plan to live here because they think "Chapel Hill has more to offer residents than almost any other small town in the country."

Displaying a most philosophical attitude toward the writing he plans to do while in retirement, Captain Hazlett commented, "It's a pleasant thing to do, but there is no money in it unless you are another James Street or Betty Smith."

Captain Hazlett had no definite comment to make upon future plans for the NROTC at the University only saying that the Senate Naval Committee was now discussing legislation to put all such units on an inactive basis at the end of the Spring term. He said that local conditions would be dependent upon national legislation.

Inactivity of NROTC does not indicate discontinuance of the unit here but only that cadets will not have to wear uniforms to class or be housed in quarters provided by the Navy. Captain Hazlett estimated that there would be approximately 300 cadets here in peacetime.
