Court Hears Ten Cases, One Guilty

Of ten cases heard by the Men's Honor Council in the past month, seven were charges of cheating, one was a charge of forgery, one was a Campus Code violation and one was an appeal for removal of probation, Allan Milledge, chairman of the council, announced yesterday.

Six of the defendants charged with cheating were exonerated. Charges were brought in five of the six cases because of wrong answers in the defendant's quiz paper which were similar to wrong answers in the paper of one of the defendant's classmates. Suspicion was raised in the sixth case when the defendant left the classroom for more than an hour during a final examination.

One student was found guilty on two separate charges—cheating one class and forgery of infirmary excuses in another. He was suspended from the University.

The council refused to release from probation a student who was serving his sentence for a violation of the Campus Code as he had not completed the minimum requirement of two full quarters on probation.

In its tenth case the Council found a student guilty of a violation of the Campus Code and placed him on probation.

Pro Policy Hit By Phi

Professionalized football at this school received another haymaker Tuesday night when the Philanthropic Assembly overwhelmingly passed a bill calling for de-emphasis and labeling the local operation of the sport as "frankly hypocritical" and a source of "moral corruption to the youth of today."

The bill passed the assembly with only two objecting votes and also passed when guests of the assembly were permitted to vote along with Phi members.

"Intercollegiate athletics are operated on a frankly hypocritical basis with regard to professionalism," the bill proclaims. Since these activities are no longer conducted in such a manner as to encourage sportsmanship, they are a source of moral corruption to the youth of today, it continues.

The bill urged that the "present system of professional athletics acting as representatives of the student body in intercollegiate sports be caused to cease forthwith."

In their present state of professionalism, intercollegiate athletics are not a proper activity of a university and adversely affect the educational quality of institutions which endeavor to become outstanding in athletics, the resolution stated.

Record?

Back in 1929 when things hit rock bottom, a man set a record in local society which may stand even today. Not a student, but employed here, he dated forty-two (42) different coeds during one summer session. That was a different girl every night for six weeks.

The record setter, now "happily married," lives in Chapel Hill. He asked that his identity not be disclosed for he wants to remain "happily married" in Chapel Hill. But he did comment that of those dates in '29, some were "red hot" and others were not. Time does not change the basics.
