

Foreign Consul Says French Students Are Federation Minded

France and the free nations of the world are still fighting for the freedom which Bastille Day symbolizes, Andre Nemo, representative of the French government at the annual Bastille Day banquet held by the French House, said in an address here Saturday night.

Nemo, an exchange professor between the United States and France at Georgetown University, Washington, who is on his way to Houston, Texas, where he will manage the French consulate for the remainder of the Summer, praised the University's French House program. "I found a real French atmosphere there," he declared.

He brought greetings from Pierre Dupont, consul general of France in Washington, who was unable to be present for the celebration.

The speaker, who was introduced by Prof. Hugo Giduz, director of the French House, pointed out that July 14 is the anniversary of the fall of the Bastille which symbolizes French independence. The slogans of the French Revolution, "liberty, equality and fraternity," he said, "have not lost their significance in France today."

Discussing the closeness of the United States and France, Nemo declared that "in spite of geographical distance, the Atlantic Ocean is a factor of union rather than separation (referring to the Atlantic Pact) and students in France are becoming more and more interested in a world federation of nations."

Nemo opened the floor for a discussion of the World Federalist movement and the remarks centered around the idea of whether world federation is feasible at the present time or whether regional federation is best. Participating were Dr. Robert Lee Humber of Greenville, founder of the World Federalist movement, Chancellor Robert B. House, of the University, and Russell M. Grumman, director of the University Extension Division. Chancellor House also gave a brief welcome.

Announcement was made that Miss Mary Wade Newton, West Palm Beach, Fla., an undergraduate student at Maryville College, Maryville, Tenn., was chosen the outstanding student attending the French House this summer and was presented the annual $150 Effie Draper-Savage award. The scholarship is given by Edward T. Draper-Savage of the French Department in memory of his mother.

More than 260 watermelons were consumed by the large group which attended this third annual summer festival.

Movie Ads Cute, Scribe Proclaims

By Fred Thompson

Did you see the throwaways which recently hit the Chapel Hill streets? They proclaim: "I am a movie fan."

"I have traveled everywhere. Samarkand the Barbary Coast. On the camel trails of the Sahara and through the Khyber Pass. I have followed the seaways and the airways to the familiar places and to the strange ports of call all around the world. I am a 20th century Marco Polo.

"I am a movie fan . . . I was with MacArthur on the battleship Missouri. I attended the sessions of the United Nations. I was at the Paris conference. I will be at the next Olympic Games. I am informed of the world of today, for I am present on all great occasions and at all great events.

"I am a movie fan. Good fortune has brimmed my cup. No man before me was ever so richly endowed or more fortunate.

"I am a movie fan." Why be active? Activity requires energy. Energy comes from food. Food is expensive. What to do? Save money by movie-going. In the movies, all problems flicker away.

Since January, I figure I have sat on my fanny for forty days and forty nights. And just think—this is only July.

"Passivity pacifies" is my motto for—I am a movie fan."

Trustee Meeting Studies Negroes

Trustees of the University were meeting in Raleigh yesterday for further discussion of the question of admitting Negroes to the University as The Tar Heel went to press.

The meeting closely follows a suit by Gwendlyn L. Harrison of Kinston, who wants to do work on a doctor's degree here.

The Harrison woman, who studied Spanish in the University of Mexico, received her masters degree in the subject at the University of Southern California. University officials said she wasn't qualified.

She filed suit for an injunction against leading officials of the University asking that they admit her to summer school. Hearing in the suit, originally set for Federal District Court in Greensboro on July 13, was continued until July 21 to give the University sufficient time to prepare its defense.

UNC Magazine Studies Law

An interpretation of the new law affecting search and seizure is contained in the current issue of "The Law Enforcing Officer," a bulletin published by the UNC Institute of Government.

Written by Ernest W. Machen, Jr., assistant director of the institute, the explanation of the law, passed by the 1951 General Assembly, shows that evidence obtained through an illegal search without a warrant is inadmissible in court.

Because there has been misinterpretation of the new statute, Machen wrote a clear explanation for the benefit of law enforcement officers throughout the State.

It is pointed out that one of the reasons for passing the law is because some courts have maintained that admitting in court evidence illegally seized is the equivalent of forcing a man to testify against himself.

A better reason, Machen says, is that the Supreme Court, since 1914, has held that the Federal courts might not be performing their duty of upholding the Constitution if they permitted the government to introduce against a defendant evidence which the government has seized in violation of that defendant's constitutional rights.

Practical effects of the law, according to Machen, are that the law enforcement officers will have to be more careful and resourceful in preparing their cases and, should too many criminals go undetected, the Legislature could extend, slightly, the area within which a search without a warrant is legal without backtracking.

"For instance," Machen says, "it (the Legislature) might amend the liquor law to say that an officer could search a car on 'reasonable grounds to believe' that the car is transporting liquor illegally instead of on 'absolute personal knowledge,' as at present. However, that is for the legislature, not the law enforcement officers, to decide."

He said the ultimate effect of the new statute on law enforcement "ought to be beneficial rather than hurtful."

Dr. W. D. Perry Returns From Puerto Rican Clinic In Education, Public Health

Dr. W. D. Perry

Dr. W. D. Perry, associate professor of education and director of the University Testing Service, has returned from two weeks of working with 150 Puerto Rican supervisors and administrators in the Departments of Education and Public Health.

Dr. Perry was one of five visiting faculty members from the United States to conduct three Mental Health Workshops for Puerto Rican administrators.

The Workshops were held in San Juan, Arecibo, and Ponce under the joint sponsorship of the department of public health and the department of education.

Persons invited to attend the workshops were supervisors and administrators in the fields of education, public health, welfare, social work and nursing.

Discussions centered around the solving of supervisory problems through the use of mental health principles. In addition to Dr. Perry, who represented education, the staff included two psychiatrists, a medical social worker, and a nurse.

This is the second time Dr. Perry has served as a visiting educational consultant to Puerto Rican workshops, according to Dean Guy Phillips, head of the School of Education. He was there for two other Mental Health Workshops in February, 1950.

Dr. Perry was recently invited as one of 15 educators to work on a seven months assignment with educational facilities in 11 universities in Japan in initiating and organizing professional courses for the preparation and upgrading of educational personnel.
