

Decision Expected Tomorrow On N. C. College Expansion

A decision is expected this week on whether $271,000 will be appropriated from State emergency reserve funds for instituting doctorate work in education at North Carolina College in Durham in September, 1952.

A joint UNC-North Carolina college committee, named to study immediate expansion of graduate work at the Negro institution will appear before the Council of State of Raleigh tomorrow and request that the appropriation be made.

The most recent action on the controversial issue was when a UNC subcommittee agreed on July 16 to help obtain the funds for N.C.C.

The emergency appropriation, if approved Friday, would provide $157,200 for next year when the graduate training would begin and $114,000 for the current year before the Ph.D. program is instituted.

The University group also agreed to support N.C.C. when it makes a request before the 1953 General Assembly for $1,800,000 for the building program N.C.C. trustees have said is necessary for expanding graduate work. The funds would be used to construct buildings for study in the field of education, biology and commerce.

JIMMIE WALLACE
Jimmie Wallace has withdrawn as one of Carolina's delegates to the National Students Association Congress scheduled to meet at the University of Minnesota at the end of this month. Wallace, who would have been the only one at the meeting of the ten original American students who went to the Prague conference in 1948, was selected

Henry Bowers will name some one this week to fill the vacant position. Wallace gave as his reason for withdrawing the fact that he is now teaching social science here at the University and the congress meets before this term is over.

Seven Week Cruise Ends

Eight NROTC midshipmen from the University have just completed a seven-weeks' cruise on the USS Albany where they had an opportunity to put their classroom naval science into practice.

The midshipmen, three seniors and five sophomores, embarked on a three-phase training cruise which provided them with a knowledge of seamanship and other practical factors necessary for future naval officers.

Also embarked in the Albany were midshipmen from the Naval Academy and those enrolled in 17 of the 52 college and university NROTC programs.

Council Charges Draft Boards Show Prejudice

(Special to The Tar Heel)
WASHINGTON—The American Council on Education complained this week that some draft boards are showing prejudice against college students.

Brig. Gen. Louis H. Renfrow, acting director of Selective Service, replied that "arbitrary action by local boards should not be tolerated."

The complaint was aired on a radio program, "Youth and the Draft."

Raymond S. Howes, staff associate of the council, said this private organization of educators is getting many letters complaining that local boards "have a bias against college students."

Howes said some of these boards classify college students 1-A immediately eligible for the draft—regardless of their scholastic standing or their score in the recent draft aptitude test.

Renfrow said that the number of boards of that type probably is small, and that local boards may know the individual "so well that what on the face might look like discriminatory action, in reality may be justified."

"Always, the authority of the local board to defer or not to defer a registrant must be preserved," Renfrow said.

Renfrow recommended appeals to the state board and, if necessary, to the state or national director, for reference to the presidential appeals board, in such cases. He said the appeal may be taken by the registrant, or by the college itself.

He also urged that colleges send reports on scholastic standing to draft boards as rapidly as possible.

"Those reports may mean much to the men who failed in their aptitude tests," Renfrow said. College men have been given a blanket deterrent until Aug. 20.
