

Hardest Yet

Washington — Greater University President Gordon Gray described his present federal government job as director of the Board of Psychological Strategy this week as "the hardest one he has yet undertaken."

Gray is devoting a part of his time to working out a program of psychological warfare strategy.

It is a new field for which there is little precedent, he said. It is a matter of both outlining a plan and working out a program.

Gray, who was former secretary of the Army and who spent several months on an assignment by President Truman on the nation's global economic strategy, said the program he is working on at present is too new to make any specific statement about it.

Brooks Is Honored For Press Donation

A trust fund that is expected to provide $100,000 for the University of North Carolina Press within a decade has been set up.

The donor is Aubrey Lee Brooks, prominent Greensboro lawyer, author and political leader. The gift is in the form of 1400 shares of stock in the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance company. The stock is valued today at approximately $56,000 and is expected to double in value within the next 10 years, Mr. Brooks said.

Formal announcement of the gift was made at a dinner meeting at the Morehead building last Friday night attended by Mr. and Mrs. Brooks and their son and daughter-in-law, Dr. and Mrs. Taylor Brooks, a few close friends and business associates, administrative officials of the University and the board of governors of the University Press.

The gift had previously been accepted by the Board of Trustees.

President Gordon Gray, in accepting the gift in behalf of the Trustees, said it was symbolic of the pioneer spirit and vision of the little band of Revolutionary patriots, headed by William R. Davie, who founded the University more than 150 years ago and the small group of educators under the leadership of Dr. Louis Round Wilson who established the University Press 30 years ago.

Paying tribute to Mr. Brooks, President Gray said: "This son of the University has turned his talents into many triumphs and is widely acclaimed as a distinguished citizen of a state more noted for discriminating judgments of its people than for easy acceptance of heroes. Mr. Brooks has dignified material success and has given it warm meaning."

"A scholar in his own right, Mr. Brooks is gifted enough to have produced works good enough to be published by this University's Press. He is a man of the highest professional proficiency—yet happily a humane man."

"He is among that discerning company who know that the frontiers of the mind are not gone; that the coffers of knowledge are not full; and that the honest and free play of the mind, and the objective search for deeper truths, along with the continued acceptance of the help of God, are truly the essence of freedom—they are the things which fire the spirit of freedom."

Prof. Robert H. Wettach, chairman of the University Press' Board of Governors, presented to Mr. Brooks a scroll on which was inscribed a resolution signed by the governors of the Press. Praising Mr. Brooks for his "magnificent gift" the resolution said that "generous in itself, the gift is more significant because it comes from a man whose distinguished career as lawyer has exemplified the ideals of freedom and justice under the law and whose contributions as scholar and author have added immeasurably to an understanding of North Carolina's liberal tradition."

Students Fail Profs

Students at Philander Smith College, Little Rock, Ark., played turnabout on their faculty recently, gave them a test, and then failed most of them.

The tests were an attempt to determine just how many of the faculty members possessed what the students considered the five desired characteristics of a good college teacher.

They listed these characteristics, (1) He knows his subject matter and makes definite plans for each lesson, (2) He encourages individual thinking, (3) He gives tests frequently enabling students to always know their standing in the class, and understands that now all students excel in written examinations, (4) He is so interested in his subject matter that he inspires his students, is kind yet firm, is always willing to help students, and (5) He remains poised under pressure.

Only five of the school's thirty-nine teachers received an "A" grade from their students. Of the first ten teachers, five were men and five women. Also, all teachers in the first ten have had many years of teaching experience.
