Carolina Students Attend 7th Annual National Congress

Six University of North Carolina student leaders will participate in the seventh annual National Student Congress August 22-31, at Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa, which will draw delegates from more than 250 American colleges.

The University will be represented by Joel Fleishman, Fayetteville; Don W. Geiger, Tampa, Fla., and R. Martin Jordan, Jr., Concord, all seniors; Louis Kraar, Charlotte, Edgar W. McCurry, Jr., Shelby, and Chaloner B. Schley, Eccleston, Md., juniors.

Delegates at the Congress will discuss campus, national and world problems which affect student interests, and will review and establish basic policies for the U. S. National Student Association, world's largest non-Communist student federation. Concentrating on the theme, "The Responsibilities of Freedom," the students will study such issues as the effect of the Supreme Court's segregation ruling on colleges, means of improving student self-government in the United States and methods of strengthening non-Communist student movements abroad.

All six UNC delegates have held important campus student offices and are active in various phases of student work.

Pigskin People Tee Off Today In 5th Tourney

The fifth annual Football Round-Up golf tournament for reporters, broadcasters, coaches and press photographers gets underway this afternoon.

Conference Commissioner Jim Weaver will be host to the conference's college sports publicists at a luncheon session before the field tees off.

Many of the guests arrived yesterday for a tune-up round on the University's Finley Golf Course. Officials and personnel of the course have been working hard in past days to get the 18-hole layout in top shape.

In conjunction with the tourney, the ACC booking office committee met yesterday, followed by a session of the athletic directors of the eight schools in the conference.

The University of North Carolina Athletic Association will be host at the tournament and a barbecue supper on the clubhouse grounds afterwards when trophies and other prizes will be presented.

"South America is a pretty big territory, especially when you have to hitchhike to get around," said Robert E. Lowry, 22, of Troy, Ohio in an interview here yesterday. Bob, a summer session student here at U.N.C., recently returned to the United States after a nine month jaunt through a large part of Central and South America.

He originally intended to be gone only two months, but due to interest in threatened revolutions and boundary disputes, investigation of business opportunities, studies in a university, and a passionate desire to see places not generally seen by tourists, he was willingly detained for a much longer time.

Attended Cornell

Bob attended Cornell University in Ithaca, N. Y. for two years, prior to his trip. His younger brother, Ken, is a regular student here and Bob hopes to be admitted for the fall term in order to pursue his studies in political science. He is supporting himself this summer by working as

Group Gives Last Concert Sunday Night

The Summer Session Chorus and Orchestra at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, will be presented in the second concert of the season in Hill Hall Sunday, August 22, at 8 p.m.

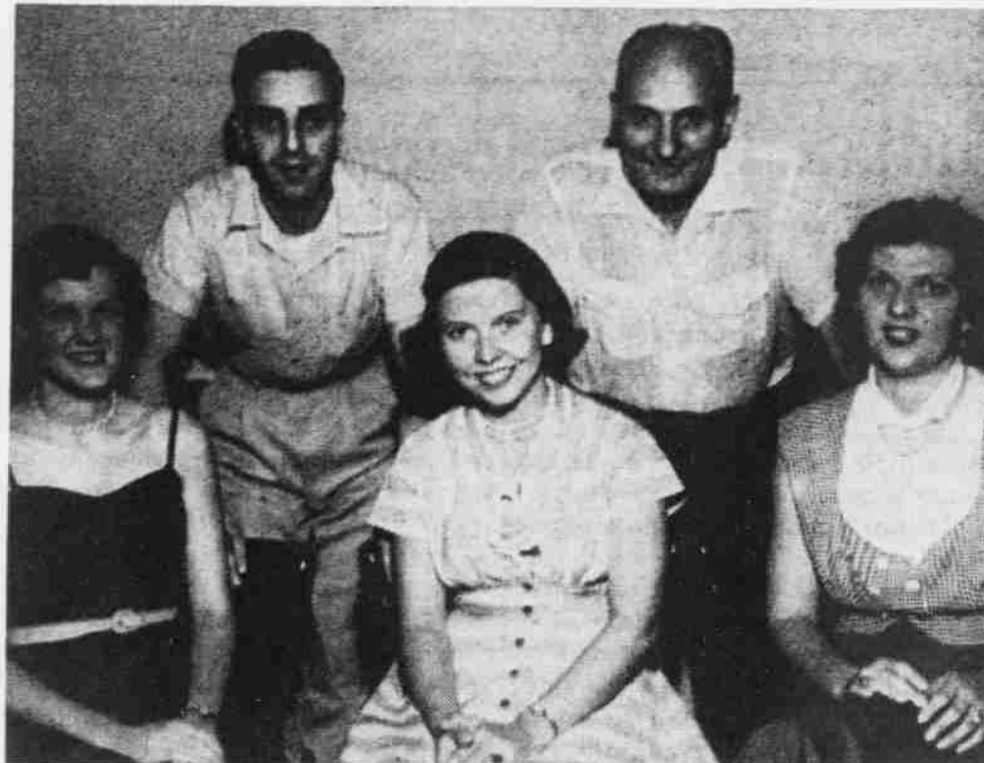

Admission is free and the public is invited.

The chorus is composed of some 29 voices and 18 players will be in the orchestra. Robert L. Weaver, Chapel Hill, candidate for the Ph.D. in music, is director.

The program will begin with a Concerto for Strings by C.P.E. Bach, son of the famous J. S. Bach, and the major work, Palestrina's "Missa Brevis" will follow with the use in performance of a great variety of instruments in keeping with Renaissance concept.

"Usually the 'Missa Brevis' is performed a cappella throughout, chiefly for the reason that only voice parts are extant," Director Weaver explained, "however our performance will be in keeping with the original practice.

"A brass quartet opposed by a string group will at times double the voices, and at other times, will play the voice parts as instrumental solos," he said.
