

New Course Included In Univ. Law School

Statute Law-Making.

April 17—Mr. Winston, The Jury System.

The total registration in the law school numbers 121 as compared with 118 at this time last year. Although there is a falling off in the registration for the first and second year, the third year class numbers 39 as compared with 15 last year. This means that the senior class, in spite of a one hundred per cent success on the part of the University's candidates for admission to the bar last summer (most of whom had completed only two years' study of law) is nearly three times the size of any previous senior class. Nineteen of the entering class of 43 have college degrees, 3 have had four years of college work but have not received their degrees, and 14 have had three years of college preparation. Only 7 (as compared with 16 last year) of the entering students have complied with merely the minimum entrance requirements of two years of college preparation. Ten per cent of the student body are from other states. Eight states are represented.

The four research assistants to the faculty are: John Anderson, Chapel Hill; Walter Hoyle, Lincoln; H. B. Parker, Monroe; and A. K. Smith, Raleigh. These men who are receiving a salary of $250 a year each, are devoting twelve hours a week to the work of assisting the faculty in research projects. Mr. Anderson has been assigned to Professor Breckenridge for work in the field of corporations. Mr. Hoyle has been assigned to Mr. Van Hecke for work in connection with the restatement of contracts. Mr. Parker has been assigned to assist Miss Lucile Elliott, law librarian, and Mr. Smith, the student editor-in-chief of the North Carolina Law Review, has been assigned to Professor Wettach, the faculty editor-in-chief, to assist in the supervision of the student editorial staff.

Professor Albert Coates is absent on leave, pursuing advanced work as Research Fellow in Criminal Law at the Harvard law school. Some of his courses are being taught during his absence by Professors McIntosh and Van Hecke.

Gardner and Chase Plead for Funds

"It is essentially spiritual in its nature, consists in a new approach to and appraisal of cultural values, and lies between those parallels which separate mediocrity from excellence. We have, in other words, achieved a mediocre respectability in higher education here in the South. Public support of our state colleges and universities, plus a few notable private benefactions and the aid of some of the educational foundations have brought us thus far, but we stand today with only the slenderest margin between the operation of these institutions and the bread and butter line.

"Let me illustrate. U. B. Phillips of Georgia and William E. Dodd of North Carolina are perhaps the two greatest living authorities on Southern history. But do they work in the South? Indeed, no! One had to migrate to the University of Michigan, and the other to the University of Chicago to find the materials and the financial support with which to study the history of their homeland. We Southerners protest at the inadequacies and even the unfairness of American historical writing. But we do not have any grounds for complaint when we will not support the collecting and preserving of Southern historical source materials, to say nothing of financing their use. To suggest the distance by which we lag in such matters, try to imagine the contrary situation of the North and West relying upon us to perform a similar service for them!

"The reasons why public support stops at the bread and butter line and falls short of the limits of University responsibility and opportunity are not difficult to find," Governor Gardner declared.

"In the first place," he said, "there has existed, and still exists in some degree, a serious limitation in the field of inadequate sources of revenue. The South has only recently attained to any semblance of economic security and popular support of public education in the form of taxation—must always be governed by the ability of the people to pay.

"In the second place, by its very structure and purpose the state university is, if successful, the advance guard of civilization. It touches, despite the amazingly large matriculation in higher educational institutions, only a small percentage of the population. It must, therefore, derive that sentiment of wide popular support from a confidence in the efficacy and integrity of the institution itself, rather than in any absolute understanding of the significance and value of the work being done.

"What, then, is the answer to this problem? How shall we alumni of the University of North Carolina and Georgia and the alumni and friends of these and other Southern State institutions respond to this newest challenge? In North Carolina—and I think that I am safe in assuming that the same condition prevails generally in the South—we urgently need not only the money with which immediately to endow a great collection of source material on Southern history and a school of fine arts and a great school of medicine, but we need an entirely new attitude on the part of our alumni and friends as to the usefulness and significance of this kind of giving. Of what use are all material riches in the world if we, as a people, lose our appreciation of that which brings to life beauty and spiritual assurance? Man does not live by bread alone and our obligation to the generations that are to come involves infinitely more than leaving them a community and state and section that are economically self-sufficient and well-ordered. It involves leaving them an environment and a civilization with which they will not find themselves spiritually at war.

"In a peculiar sense the University of North Carolina faces now the challenge of which I have spoken tonight. The State is supporting and will continue to support the work there as liberally as it can. But this is not sufficient. A minimum of $10,000,000 in additional endowment is not only needed, but is imperatively necessary if the institution is to fulfill its educational mission. I cannot go into a detailed analysis of these needs, but this is unnecessary at this time. Doctor Chase has indicated some of them. Neither is it necessary for me to add that Doctor Chase and I and other alumni friends of the University are not thinking now merely in terms of a provincial State university. We are thinking, rather, of a great American university, located in the South and adequately equipped to meet the needs of a changing civilization.

"We have just been through the opening days of the University. Despite depression and hard times, our enrollment has increased over last year by more than a hundred students. I wish you could know at first hand the difficulties under which many of these students are in college; I wish you could hear as I have heard, something of the sacrifices of boys and parents both. You would, I know, be stimulated by it, and you would feel, as I feel, how much we need a large increase in our loan funds and our scholarship resources for these hard-working boys.

"We have, at the University, promising beginnings in the fine arts. The Playmakers Theatre came from outside funds. So did the beautiful Kenan Memorial Stadium, a contribution to beauty as well as to athletics. The fine organ and the concert auditorium that we will add to our musical life this year came to us as a gift. It would be, both for our students and for the state, a splendid enrichment of our life to develop here an art museum with its collections of beauty and taste. The whole artistic level of the state would in the end be raised by such a gift.

"Our campus, with its great natural beauty and the fine taste and service of Dr. Coker, could be put almost in a class by itself by additions to available funds.

"Again, a faculty of excellence is the heart of any university. Our Kenan Fund for salaries has been an enormous source of strength to us. We need even more opportunity for the reward of special achievements, and there are many, in our University life.

"And I might go on. I hope I have made my point concrete enough. There are literally scores of undertakings ripe for action, planned, thought through, any one of which would add distinction and excellence to the life of the University, and which only await sufficient funds. Say, if you like, that the state should do all these things. I reply that, in practice, there is always a gap between the power of the state and the genuine needs of any university worthy of the name."

THE FUTURE

May it be as great and illustrious as the past. Alumni can hardly hope for more for their great University.

Congratulations

to a great University

on the passage of another milestone

1793-

General William Davie and a notable assembly laid the cornerstone of Old East, oldest State University building in the country.

1929-

The University celebrates its 136th anniversary of priceless service to its state. A great plant, a faculty of 200, serving a resident student body of 2500 and an even larger non-resident student body.

Stetson "D", young beside the University, takes pride in this great record and in its own record of service to Carolina students.
