

Field All Set For Monogram Rookie Battle This Afternoon

Game Will Be Swan Song Of Eight Men; Captain Farris To Lead Last Time Today.

Two camps of Tar Heel grid-ers stacked arms last night and waited tensely for today's Monogram-Rookie game, annual closing feature of winter football, which will give fans their first real line on whether the 1930 Tar Heels will live up to the record of their predecessors of 1929.

The Monogram-Rookie feature is to be played in Kenan stadium at 2 o'clock, so that spectators can go directly from the grid features and catch the beginning of the preliminaries for the first Southern Conference indoor games.

Captain Ray Farris, all-southern guard, will lead the Monograms into the fray—Captain Farris' last at Carolina. With him will be eight other regulars from last fall's finest Tar Heel team of all-time.

Pete Wyrick, quarterback; Strud Nash and Phil Jackson, halves, and Yank Spaulding, fullback, will team together in the Monogram backfield, with such other Monogram stars as Johnny Branch, Jim Magner, Chuck Erickson and Henry House, held in reserve for the second charge.

With Don Holt, graduated at the close of last football season, leaving his job in Graham to come back for one more last game, the Monogram line will be the same fighting, charging line of '29, except for Tackle Adkins, who will be kept out by his track participation. Holt and Fenner will man the flanks; Bill Koenig and George Thompson will have the tackles; Captain Farris and Bud Eskew will be at guard; and Ned Lipscomb will hold down center.

The Rookies will present their own quota of power. A group of new-coming backs—Moore, Chandler, Houston, McNeil, Croom, McAlister, Suggs, Lassiter and others—have been showing with the best in the intensive six weeks of practice. Last year's freshman line was unusually strong. All in all, a great battle is expected.

Probable lineups, as announced by Coach Collins are as follows:

The fact that the Monogram-Rookie game closing Tar Heel winter grid work and the first Southern Conference indoor games are both to be held on one gala program this afternoon is putting a number of versatile athletes in a quandary.

CO-EDS WIN LAST GAME OF SEASON

Johnson Features A Last-Minute Rally To Win Over Fayetteville High School Sextet, 26-24.

Staging a brilliant rally during the last three minutes of play to overcome a four-point lead, the Tar Heettes closed their season last night in Bynum gymnasium with a 26-24 win over the Fayetteville high school sextet.

Johnson of the co-eds caged two foul shots in the last two minutes to provide the winning margin. The game was hard-fought throughout, with Thacker, Johnson and Lee of the co-eds and Biggs of the visitors providing the features of the contest. Last night's game marked the close of a successful season for the local basketeers in their first year of competition with teams from other institutions.

At the end of the half the co-eds were leading 15-8, but the Fayetteville contingent had pulled up on even terms, 18-18, at the end of the third quarter.

Says Us by Browning Roach

Adherents of the division of the southern conference into two sectors, one comprising the northern institutions and the other the southern ones, should find some more supporters of their views around Chapel Hill now. After the University of Georgia knocked the Tar Heels out of the conference football title by administering to them the only defeat of the 1929 season and then, not yet satisfied, eliminated Carolina in the basketball tournament, Tar Heel fans are about ready to take any steps necessary to get rid of the Georgia jinx. A division of the conference into two sectors would clear the situation up satisfactorily for all concerned, just so Carolina and Georgia were placed in separate divisions. We don't mean to imply that we are afraid of Georgia, or any other Southern Conference team, but the Crackers were most certainly instrumental in messing up what was otherwise an untarnished grid-iron record. Here's hoping we get it back on them next year.

The Tin Can having established itself as a practicing ground for almost every sport indulged in at Carolina, why not make it all-inclusive and add tennis to the roster of athletic events engaged in beneath its spacious roof? This colossal structure has, so far as we are able to ascertain, been utilized for basketball, track, boxing, wrestling, football, fencing, baseball, golf, handball, volleyball and "doug." The Tin Can contains ample floor space for marking off one doubles and two singles courts, and tennis candidates would be able to make use of these when occasional spring showers drive the men off the outdoor courts. As it is, with more than half the courts undergoing reconstruction while the drain systems are installed, the courts fit for use do not begin to accommodate the persons desiring to play. Almost any sunshiny afternoon between two and five o'clock you can go out to the tennis courts and find every available court in use and a number of players sitting on the sidelines waiting their turn.

We have heard from semi-authoritative sources that the co-eds are planning to put out a tennis team this spring. From the way some of them handled a basketball during this past cage season, we judge that they would be good at tennis. A smaller sphere and a racket with which to manipulate would seem more fitting to their athletic attainments. We have observed—from a distance—a few of them swinging a racket in the last week or two, and if many of them can handle a swift serve and back-hand drive as well as a couple we know of, the co-eds ought to be able to get up a good team.

Heavy Hurdlers Here

Harry Flippin and Calvert deColigny, who are doped to set the pace in the hurdles at the first southern conference indoor games here this evening, tip the scales at almost 200 apiece, a strange thing for such speedsters! Flippin has broken or tied three indoor world hurdle records in the last two years. DeColigny ran the outdoor high hurdles as a freshman last year in 15.3, a story which needs no comment.

Cobb Memorial Scores Win Over N. C. Co-Eds

In a game characterized by a scoring race between the opposing centers, Cobb Memorial won from the Co-ed sextet at Bynum gymnasium Wednesday night by 31 to 20. T. Gatewood, center for the visitors, dropped in nine field goals and a foul to lead the scoring. Thacker of Carolina, ranked a good second with 12 points. L. Gatewood of Cobb Memorial and Johnson for the Co-eds, showed up best at the forward positions, with the former registering 10 points and the latter 6.

The Co-eds wind up their court season with a contest with Fayetteville high school at 7 o'clock tonight at Bynum gym.
