VOLUME XXXVIII

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., THURSDAY, MAY 22, 1930

NUMBER 176

FAMOUS DANCERS WILL APPEAR IN STADIUM TONIGHT

Ruth St. Denis and Troup Will Exhibit Latest Creations At 8:15, On Gridiron.

WILL BE SPECTACULAR

Ruth St. Denis and her famous troupe of dancers will appear here tonight at 8:15 in the Kenan stadium under the auspices of the Carolina Playmakers and the American Association of University Women.

In a program of solo and ensemble dances, embracing only a few of the numbers which have been especially popular in the past and which would be sorely missed if they were omitted, the famous dancing star will exhibit her latest creations.

A notable novelty by Miss St. Denis will be the "Bas-relief Figure from Angkor-Vat," the inspiration for which was gained when she visited the city abandoned hundreds of years ago by the vanished race of Kymers, but which still ranks with the famous temples of India and the pyramids of Egypt among the architectural wonders of the Eastern world.

Another new number will be the visualization of a Tagore poem, in the course of which Miss St. Denis will speak the poet's exquisite verse. She will offer a Tanagra figure to music of Schumann and a beguiling Rubinstein waltz, in addition to dances of India, Java, Japan, China and Cambodia, bringing the program to a close with a colorful spectacle, a scene in an East Indian bazaar, supported by the entire company.

For once the many local admirers of this great artist will have an opportunity to see a comprehensive list of her finest creations in a single program. Even then they may cry for more, for according to the Los Angeles Times after a recent recital by Miss St. Denis:

"There were precisely nine of her solo dances with lovely fragments for encores, but there was not enough of Miss St. Denis. She is a thousand women. One feels that she could go on forever picturing lovely, evanescent, changing, adorable femininity."

Assisting her will be a new and youthful group of Denishawn Dancers who will exhibit a series of ensemble numbers never seen before, since they present the latest conception of the creative genius of America's greatest dancer.

An unusually large crowd from all over the state is expected to attend the performance tonight because of the international reputation of Miss St. Denis and her dancers. Admission prices will range from $2 for reserved seats to 50 cents for student tickets.

Correction

Ed Hedgepeth, graduate of the University, has written the editor to correct a statement carried in press dispatches to the effect that Carolina men at the University of Pennsylvania were involved in a recent riot. According to Hedgepeth no Carolina medical student was involved, the riot being confined to members of the undergraduate student body.

SPARROW'S POOL ATTRACTS MANY

Sun-Bathers and Swimmers Putting In Long Hours At Favorite Retreat.

(By Hugh Wilson)

Mrs. Sparrow, proprietress of Chapel Hill's sole bathing emporium—all kinds of baths, both shower, pool, sun and mud baths being available, generally in the foregoing order—has made some new installations recently in order to attract still more of the bathing fiends to her already large patronage. The addition mentioned is the installation of a new and modern springboard, which has already attracted great attention and favor from the divers—and incidentally from those who like to sun themselves on the edge of the pool and are disturbed by the tidal waves thrown up by various and sundry high divers!

This is the seventh year that Mrs. Sparrow has been running the pool, and if the patronage of the persons who daily seek refuge from the heat in its cool waters is to be taken as a criterion, it is one of Chapel Hill's most popular institutions. Certainly with the Chapel Hillians themselves, and also with those unfortunates who attend summer school here, Mrs. Sparrow deserves credit as a philanthropist. This year, as usual, the crowds have been large, six or seven hundred people a week paying the required—and very nominal—two-bit fee to cool their perspiring skins in the water. The fame of the pool has even spread so far as to reach Durham, several water fans coming over from the Bull City each week for a swim.

Mrs. Sparrow says that the attendance has been very largely increased in the last couple of years with the advent of the sun tan craze which has swept the country so recently, causing the manufacturers of women's summer clothes and bathing suits so much anguish. It is even rumored that this craze was the cause of several aviators having crashed into the roofs of buildings in larger eastern cities, they having forgotten to steer their planes because of what they saw when they approached too close to the buildings. At the pool there are several tables which may be used quite appropriately by picknickers. Sad to say, however, these tables are more frequently used by the sun-bathers. In addition to these facilities for baths in the sun and pool, there are showers in the dressing rooms, and if one likes a mud bath, there are always a lot of playful gents there to accommodate—sometimes previous to one's wishes!

In addition to all these fine assets, all those who are not ac-

Taft Reminisces On Progressive School And Community Changes

Prominent Sculptor Is Greatly Impressed With Unusual Beauty And Individuality Of University; Considers Institution Foremost In Fields of Research and Drama.

According to Lorado Taft, who has been staying at the residence of Dr. J. P. Harland during his three-day sojourn at the University, many changes have taken place in the community in the past eight years. It has been that long since he last appeared in Chapel Hill. Since then the streets of the town have been paved, many new buildings have been built, and the University has risen to the front in the fields of research and drama.

The great sculptor, hailed in many art circles as the world's greatest, was greatly impressed by the natural beauty of the campus. "It is very rare," he said, "that one finds a state university of such beauty. They usually grow up according to the dictates of economics, and the University of North Carolina is blessed with such individuality."

However, he expressed great surprise upon learning that the University had no art department. "It is very unfortunate," he said; "you are practically the only university in the country that does not have such a division." Moreover he expressed his opinion that even in such a practical science as engineering free-hand drawing is always a great aid.

"To understand art is to widen one's appreciation and, consequently, enjoyment. That is why I am striving so hard to lay more stress upon this line in colleges throughout the United States." The main difficulty in furthering art in America, he said, is the scarcity of people really acquainted with the craft. Through education this condition can be remedied.

The two main ambitions of the great sculptor are the creation of a great art museum and the completion of his idealistic sculptural project in Chicago. The Utopian museum, which he frequently mentions in his lectures throughout the country, would consist of several long aisles, each containing a nation's art arranged in historical order, with transepts cross-cutting the corridors representing the different periods of history. In his lectures he is propagandizing for the realization of this ambition, he admits.

The great figurative groups he has undertaken in the mid-way district of Chicago will be one of the greatest art treasures of the world. One of these groups has already been completed. This is the mammoth statue of the Father of Time, which stands at the western extremity of the Midway and is effectively silhouetted against the setting sun. At the eastern end of the commons, he contemplates a corresponding group symbolizing the creation of man. With intense anticipation he looks forward to the completion of this highly idealistic piece of Archaic sculpture, which will not be affected in form because of its mythological subject, "Deucalion and Pyrrha," not the ordinary Adam and Eve material.

With excusable pride Mr. Taft spoke of "his Chicago." This city, he predicts, will sometime in the near future be the center of the world. "It is a city of destiny," he repeats. According to the great sculptor, the World's Fair at Chicago in 1933 will do more to further art in America than any other incentive; it will present an exhibition of statuary properly placed and properly

DEBATE COUNCIL GIVES AWARDS TO EIGHT DEBATERS

Speight Succeeds Williams As New Head; Next Year's Schedule Is Discussed.

After all votes had been turned in yesterday, George McKie, secretary of the debate council, announced that W. W. Speight had been elected president of the council for next year. The vote was 6 to 5, with Speight having the majority. The old council met with the recently elected group in discussing debating activities for next year and in electing a new president.

Certificates and monograms were awarded for meritorious work this year. A monogram is given a debater who has taken part in at least two intercollegiate debates during the college year. Certificates are given those who have already received monograms in previous years. J. M. Baley, McB. Fleming-Jones and C. T. Meares will receive monograms, while G. P. Carr, J. C. Williams, J. Wilkinson, W. W. Speight and H. H. Hobgood will receive certificates.

A debate schedule for next year was discussed by the two councils though no definite plans have yet been adopted. Those of the old council who were present at the meeting are: J. C. Harris, John Wilkinson, J. C. Williams and W. W. Speight. McKie was the only faculty member present. Howard Mumford Jones and Frank Graham, faculty members of the council, were absent, as was Beatty Rector. A successor to Jones, who will leave the University this summer, is to be appointed by President Chase.

Fleece Initiates

The Order of the Golden Fleece initiated its nine new members on Tuesday night in a secret ceremony held at an unknown location. The new argonauts sighed with relief yesterday as they felt the strain of the anticipated initiation over, although they appeared a bit sore and sleepy. No longer do they have to be in their beds by 10:30 or do any of the other "severe" requirements demanded by old members. They are now ready to embark on their "quest for the Golden Fleece" as Jason and his Argonauts did in the famous Greek legend.

The following were initiated: Joe Eagles, Ed Hamer, Pat Patterson, Marion Alexander, Will Yarborough, "Puny" Harper, Clyde Dunn, Archie Allen and Noah Goodridge.

The first long distance telephone line to Chapel Hill was established in 1901.

NATIONAL HEAD ENDORSES STATE STUDENT GROUP

N. S. F. A. President Writes Lang Supporting Newly Formed N. C. Federation.

Within two weeks after its organization, the North Carolina Federation of Students has attracted the attention of many student governments and federations throughout the country and has also become actively engaged in helping two student governments of this state settle some very grave problems in their respective student bodies.

John Lang, president of the state student organization, recently received a letter from Ed R. Murrow, president of the National Student Federation of the United States, in which he gave his hearty endorsement and support to the student movement in North Carolina. Moreover, President Murrow pledged the undivided support of the national federation to the state movement. In his letter to Lang, President Murrow announced that the national federation was so interested in the state organization that it is sending him from his home in the state of Washington to North Carolina early in June to interview Lang in an effort to harmonize the work of the two federations.

Lang has recently received a letter from the vice-president of the Southern Federation of Students pledging him the support of that organization in his work in North Carolina. Many faculty members and students in this state and elsewhere have been writing to the officials for information about the state federation, and there seems to be a general note of approval in all of these letters of the start that the student movement in North Carolina has already made.

Officials of the federation are considering a number of plans by which they hope to strengthen and improve the organization. Possibly the most important of these new plans is the one by which they are hoping to plant student government to some extent in the high schools and preparatory schools of the state. A campaign for reciprocal athletic tickets for the college students of the state has also been planned. Less hissing and booing at athletic contests will form another policy which the federation is going to urge. Finally, a campaign for junior college members for the federation is going to be waged next fall. President Lang has called a meeting of his executive committee at Chapel Hill to convene early next fall, at which time he hopes to be able to outline a most useful and effective program for the state student federation during the coming year.
