

RICHMOND SIGNS CAPTAIN POWELL FOR HOT CORNER

This Year's Captain Signs for Professional Career After Being Declared Ineligible.

Willie Powell, captain of this year's Carolina baseball team signed a contract with the Richmond professional baseball team of the Piedmont league yesterday according to information received last night. The Richmond team played Durham there last night and there is a chance that the former Tar Heel third baseman saw action.

The work of Captain Powell has been watched by baseball scouts for the past two years and he has received favorable recommendations from most of them. He is considered the best fielding third baseman among college teams in the state. Powell has a strong, and accurate arm that any infielder in baseball would be proud of.

Powell is one of quite a few Tar Heels that have been signed by professional teams during the past few years, and will be opposing two former teammates in the loop that he is getting a trial in. Louis Whitehead and Maus, center fielder and catcher, respectively, play with Greensboro of the Piedmont league. Maus was also a former Carolina captain. Other Carolina stars of recent years with professional teams are Burgess Whitehead, short-the breach left by Rex Enright's resignation and coached the Carolina freshmen to a Big Five title. During the same year he served as assistant graduate manager and director of intramural athletics.

JOHNSON APPEARS IN VIOLIN RECITAL HERE

In addition to his major offering, "Kreutzer Sonata," Johnson played a group of three short compositions.

Basketball Coach

He was appointed varsity basketball coach two years ago and his 1932 team went to the finals of the conference tournament, while his team this year went to the semi-finals. He has shown conspicuous ability both as administrator and coach.

Mr. Woolen, who has been connected with the University in an administrative capacity since 1901, has been identified with the management of athletics since 1910, when he accepted appointment as treasurer of the Athletic association. In 1913 he was also named graduate manager and continued as treasurer.

When he was asked to take over the management of athletic affairs in 1910, Mr. Woolen, with the hearty support of faculty and alumni committees on athletics, formulated a policy calling for increasingly higher standards for athletics and immediately set out to arrange the most attractive schedules possible and to place the Athletic association upon a sound financial basis.

During this period there have come to the institution more attractive schedules, steadily increasing attendance at games, better coaches, and better equipment, to mention a few of the improvements.

Mr. Woolen directed the movement which led to the gift by William Rand Kenan, Jr., of Kenan Memorial stadium.

His program of extension has also called for an adequate gymnasium, which is still greatly needed, but largely through his efforts the legislature was persuaded to alleviate congested conditions in the old gymnasium, built in 1904, by the construction of the large indoor sports arena known as the Tin Can.

Along with these improvements have come additional prestige and influence resulting from a wide administration of the University's athletic affairs and active participation in the Southern Conference and other organizations looking to the highest standards in scholarship as well as athletics.

The record shows that under the management of Mr. Woolen, University athletics took an upward turn and have never changed their course.

Notice To Athletes

R. A. Fetzter, director of athletics, requests all students with University athletic equipment to return same to Sergeant Keller at the store room Wednesday and Thursday from 9:00 to 5:00 o'clock. Prompt cooperation is expected in this request.

Famous Old Baseballer Enjoys Two Weeks' Stay At Carolina

Bill Bradley, Former Big League Star and at Present Scout for Cleveland Indians, Takes Rest in Southern Clime and Becomes Ardent Tar Heel Fan During Sojourn.

One of the most integral units of a big league baseball club is its scouting organization. In fact, several noted baseball authorities have said that a major league club is no better than its scouting system.

At present there is in Chapel Hill, in the capacity of an American League scout, one of baseball's greatest luminaries in the person of Bill Bradley, ivory hunter for the Cleveland Indians. As Bradley says, the past two weeks that he has been in Chapel Hill are among the finest that he has spent on the road, and he should know, for he has been hunting rookies for the past six years.

Rises From Sandlots

Bradley's career reads like a Horatio Alger novel; it was a rise from the sandlots to a point where he ranked with Jimmy Collins as the game's greatest third basemen. Bradley was born in Cleveland and played with some amateur sandlot clubs there when he attracted the attention of a Chicago National scout. After serving a four months apprenticeship in the minors, Bill broke in with the Chicago club in 1899. At that time, Chicago was a member of the twelve club National League. In 1901 Bill was sent to the Cleveland Indians where he reigned supreme as guardian of the hot corner for ten years.

At Cleveland he had to overcome handicap after handicap. One year he was laid low by a severe attack of typhoid fever and in 1906 when the Indians and the Yankees were fighting for the pennant, Bill's arm was broken by one the New York pitchers, Hobb. But in spite of that Bradley was a consistent .300 hitter, which was no little feat with the dead ball. In fact, in 1903 Bill was nosed out by Buck Freeman, an outfielder with the Boston Red Sox, for the slugging championship of the league, and that was by one base. That year Bradley out-slugged such hitters as Ed Delehanty, Nap Lajoie, his team

Prospects Point To Strong Nine For Heels In '34

With the last game today, Carolina baseball fans begin looking forward to a strong team next season. Only three men will be lost by graduation this year and things look even brighter for a great team next season.

Joe Griffith, ace pitcher, will be the only loss from the Tar Heel pitching staff. Captain Powell, star a third base, and Johnny Peacock, centerfielder, are the other losses. Although these positions will be hard to fill, several good freshman prospects are coming up and the other men will have profited by experience this year.

Contrary to information already given out, McCaskill is eligible for another year, and the hard hitting catcher should show up even better in his final season as a Tar Heel. Both Matheson, a junior, and Strathorn, a sophomore will be back to assist Lamy in the backstopping.

Andrews and Crouch Back
Two pitchers have already shown their worth as hurlers this year besides the graduating Griffith, Andrews, sophomore

Duke And Carolina Meet In Final Tilt Of Season On Emerson Field Today

Carolina's fast-stepping baseball team rings down its curtain this afternoon for the 1933 season, meeting the Duke Blue Devils on Emerson field at 4:00 o'clock.

Joe Griffith, big righthander, will hurl for the Tar Heels in the last game of his college career. Griffith has pitched beautiful ball all season, winning seven games and losing three. All his losses have been by one run margins. He has allowed only fifty hits in eighty-five innings, which is just a little over five per game.

Coombs, also a righthander, will likely start on the mound for the Blue Devils. Coombs is also a senior and will be in his last undergraduate diamond battle. There is a chance that the Duke coach may send Flohr, southpaw, against Carolina. Flohr beat the Tar Heels 3 to 2 last year.

Griffith and Coombs met in the first game between the Duke and Carolina nines this year, with both pitching masterful ball. The Carolina hurler came out on top with a 2-1 decision, the first win for the Tar Heels over the Blue Devils since 1931.

Titles at Stake

Although Duke has no chance for any of the championships, Carolina will be battling for two. The Tar Heels are sure of a tie with State in the Southern Conference even if they lose. However a win will give Carolina an undisputed championship in the Conference with ten wins and only one defeat. South Carolina has a perfect record but has played only three conference contests so will not be counted.

In the Big Five a win will put Carolina in a tie with Davidson for the title, while a loss will give Carolina a tie with Duke and Wake Forest for second place honors.

Leonard will be at third for Carolina, the University business office putting a stop to Captain Powell's college career as a result of a mixup. Besides Powell, who played his last game against Randolph-Macon last week, and Griffith, Johnny Peacock, centerfielder, will be the only Tar Heel who will play his last college contest today.

Besides two championships to play for, Carolina will be out to finish with a great record, having won the last seven starts in a row. The last Tar Heel defeat was against State four weeks ago, and since then they have downed Virginia, Wake Forest, Duke, Georgetown, Navy, Randolph-Macon, and State without a hitch.

Minnesota Matter Cleared

In a telegram received by the DAILY TAR HEEL yesterday the Minnesota-Carolina matter was cleared up. According to the director of athletics at Minnesota the press mistook non-conference for North Carolina in their story on the Minnesota schedule.
