En Avant!

It is sometimes to the advantage of an individual to pause in the course of his daily work to take stock of himself. This thought is likewise applicable to a university. In particular should this institution pause for self-examination at the present time.

In the last generation, the University of North Carolina has risen to the position of one of the most liberal, forward-looking educational centers in the country; in the south it ranks without peer. However, in education, as in other phases of human endeavor, recognition is a transient thing. In order to command the respect and interest of the nation there must be no halt in the progress of this University.

To be sure, we are laboring under handicaps here at Chapel Hill which are almost insurmountable. We are a state institution and, as such, must accept certain undesirable features which are concomitant with the situation. The distressing and utterly undignified political wrangling of last spring constituted a necessary, though ignoble episode in our eternal struggle for funds. The instructors here, especially in the social studies, must labor under the severe handicap of having many students of deficient maturity and social background.

With all of this, however, there is no excuse for an attitude of drift in the University. The professors who manifest a keen and consistent interest in the betterment of the school can be named on one hand. Most of the other men of the faculty are too busy thinking about politics or self-aggrandizement to be interested. Alertness and experimentation are sorely needed. Let's maintain the idealism and the "drive" which characterizes our heritage!—V.J.L.

Let's Go Carolina

Tomorrow is Homecoming Day. From all over the state and beyond old Carolina men will troop back to Chapel Hill to revisit the scenes of their college days and relive for an afternoon the carefree life of the campus. Business cares will be laid aside and bankers, lawyers, and merchants will be undergraduates for a day. These are the men who made Carolina what she is and who have helped us through our crisis. It is our duty and pleasure to show them a hearty welcome and a good time.

For the first time Chapel Hill is putting on a festive appearance, the fraternity houses and the dormitories will be gaily clad in Tech and Carolina colors to show the alumni that their returning to us is a cause for celebration. The University Club, the Interfraternity Council and the merchants of Chapel Hill have been very active in supporting this movement and it is now up to the student body to cooperate in making this the biggest and best homecoming the school has ever seen.

In the afternoon Carolina meets Georgia Tech in Kenan stadium. The Tech team is good this year and slated to beat a Carolina eleven that is not as good as some that the alumni saw in their student days. But this team has worked hard and has tried hard and Saturday will find them again giving everything they've got. The student body so far this year has not done its part. The cheering at the Georgia game was carried on almost entirely by the cheerleaders who manfully attempted to awaken a listless student body to the support of their team which was losing despite their best efforts.

It's not easy for a team to go out on the field against a team doped to beat them by several touchdowns and fight like hell for two hopeless hours when all they hear from the home side is moans and groans that make it harder still. Saturday the team will be fighting harder than ever to give the homecomers a good game. The alumni will support the team, they always do. Let's help them and the boys on the field may pull a David and Goliath against the Golden Tornado; such things have happened, and happened often. The alumni want to see Carolina win, but if she loses the loss will be much easier to bear if it is evident that not only the team but the whole University still has the old Carolina spirit and is giving everything they've got, win or lose, till the last whistle blows and "the last white line is passed."—J.F.A.

A Working Organization

The accusation is frequently made, and not untruthfully, that there are too many organizations on the campus, too many which serve no purpose other than to distract the student and increase the list under his name in the Yackety. Yack. There are some, however, that serve a purpose which is of a distinct benefit to the University; and one which stands out among these for its appeal to the whole campus is the International Relations club.

It was formed four years ago by Dr. K. C. Frazer and a group of students whose interest in the intricate relations between nations was intelligent and sincere. They felt that these matters should be the concern of intelligent people and it was their intention to bring before the students for discussion topics which would broaden their outlook beyond the local horizon. Originally the group intended to confine itself to matters of diplomatic relations between nations, but as the interest of the campus increased it was decided to widen its scope. At present the club is open to discuss matters of domestic interest and also the internal problems of other nations.

Of all the organizations on the campus this club is one of the few open to the student body. The only qualification is one of interest. The growth of the club since its organization is in itself an answer to any charge of intellectual sluggishness among the students.

The International Relations club has filled a crying need on the part of the more intellectually curious students, and the extent of its influence, and of similar clubs on other campuses, will be more apparent in the next generation. The best way to insure a real interest of the people in the affairs of their country, both internal and foreign, is to stimulate the student populace and give them ample opportunity to discuss under capable leadership the problems of the nation.—V.C.R.

Going Forward

The NRA under President Roosevelt has launched upon what the headlines term a policy of managed currency. A few years ago when Professor Dewey advocated such a system the general public considered him as a highly theoretical utopian economist whose theories were better adapted for books than for practice. Today the United States has an administration which is actively interested in getting the country out of the depression and of maintaining a condition in which every man can enjoy a living wage.

In attempting to make this administration with its policies workable it is highly essential that the prices on farm products should be quickly raised. These prices are dependent upon the relative value of the commodities and money. Managed currency is another name for a policy of inflation and deflation to maintain prices at a fair level.

The first integral part of this program is the buying of gold with government debentures, which are notes without interest. These debentures will be given to the miners of gold who may discount them with the federal reserve banks for United States currency. These debentures are 90-day notes. The plan is to repay for them with further government notes or 91-day bonds. By regulating the value of these debentures each day the administration will be able to raise the value of farm products or the commodity price level. Fundamentally, at least for the present, this plan will mean the cheapening of the value of money.

Economists commonly agree that a managed currency is highly desirable if it is controlled. Many countries have suffered from excessive expansion; the most recent has been Germany. With the power which President Roosevelt has, and with his ability and force, it seems that the United States may become the first successful initiator of such a system. For the present, the administration is to be commended for its wisdom in taking such a progressive move and it is to be hoped that it will not proceed to the disastrous extremes to which the administrations of other countries have come.—W.R.E.

CONFERENCE HERE BEGINS SCHEDULE

 phases of "The National Recovery Act."

This afternoon a business session will be held at 1:30 o'clock. At 6:30 o'clock a banquet is to be held in the Graham Memorial banquet room with talks by Dr. Archibald Henderson and other notables featuring the program. Mrs. A. R. Wilson will present a reading, and the University quartet will render several selections. At this session J. B. McCabe, will preside as toastmaster.

Final Session

Another business session at 9:30 o'clock tomorrow will be the final formal session of the group, and officers for the coming year will be elected. In the afternoon the delegates will be guests at the Georgia Tech-Carolina football game in Kenan stadium.

Special entertainments have been arranged for the ladies attending the session starting with a reception today at 10:30 o'clock in the Carolina Inn where the ladies' reception committee will meet all the women attending the conference. This afternoon at 2:30 o'clock there will be card games and other entertainments. The ladies will meet tomorrow in the Carolina Inn at 9:30 in the morning and will be taken over the campus on a sight seeing tour.

Fifteen came to the conference yesterday, but many more are expected today. Those who registered yesterday are Karl E. Thies, Neal S. Zeigler, T. P. Z. Brunnen, Frederick Moore, R. L. Bradley, J. I. Mason, Leslie A. Heath, R. H. Sherrill, Frank P. Buck, J. Beverly Redford, C. F. Delamar, George E. Wood, C. S. Goldeton, G. E. Perrin, and E. E. Peacock.

Association Officers

The officers of the association this year are: Neal S. Zeigler, president; William E. Stevens, vice-president; Tomas P. Zum Brunnen, treasurer; and Karl E. Thies, secretary. The above officers and John B. McCabe, Leslie A. Heath, Frederick Moore, and J. I. Mason make up the board of directors.

The committee on arrangements for the conference is made up of E. E. Peacock, chairman, C. F. Delamar, J. Beverly Redford, R. H. Sherrill, and J. H. Shields.

The committee on ladies' entertainment is composed of Mesdames J. Beverly Redford, chairman; E. E. Peacock, E. W. Winkler, R. H. Sherrill, Neal S. Zeigler.

ASSEMBLY TALKS CONCERN DORMS AND BAD CHECKS

 does not report within 72 hours after his first notice, he is suspended from the University, Taylor said.

"Among the careless causes for unintentional bad checks are the failure to keep correct accounts of expenditures, bank service charges, and the government tax on checks, and the failure to make out checks accurately," he stated. "The best advice I can give you is to be careful at all times."

Water Covers Georgia Front

"A Short History of Georgia" by E. Nerton Coulter of the University of Georgia has been published by the University of North Carolina press. In his book Coulter traces the history of the Cracker state from the period when water covered the greater part of the state and it was uninhabited up to the present.

Ticket Episode Puts Graham On Forgetful List

Unexpected Foible on University President's Part Enlists Him Among Absent-Minded.

Another name has been added to the list of absent-minded college officials. This time the name is a distinguished one and is that of President Frank Porter Graham. President Graham has never been accused of belonging to the absent-minded class of college professors or presidents, but his first offense has all the earmarks of the absent-minded acts often played up in humorous publications.

The story is given by the Durham Sun under the caption: "Was President Frank Graham's Face All Red?" It appears that President Graham boarded a train in Raleigh last week after forgetting his ticket and leaving it lying on the ledge of the ticket window. He was going to Washington, and he did not discover the loss of his ticket until the train had almost reached Henderson.

President Graham was greatly embarrassed when the conductor came through the coach asking for tickets, according to a fellow passenger. "He recalled distinctly that he had purchased the ticket at the station in Raleigh, and finally decided he must have left it at the ticket window."

The conductor obligingly wired back to Raleigh, when the train stopped in Henderson, and learned that the ticket had been found at the window. Having a new ticket issued there at Henderson, President Graham continued to Washington to confer with General Hugh Johnson as a member of one of the special NRA committees.

Infirmiry List

The following students were confined to the University infirmiry yesterday: J. B. Aaron, Harry Doshier, James Ferrendo, A. M. Gibbs, Jack Lowe, Vivian Guion, J. D. Grimes, Ruth Hall, W. B. Harper, Nelson Lansdale, Woodrow Massey, J. H. Price, G. E. Radford, George Steele, Howard Spain, W. H. Sawyer, and William McCloud.
