The film adaptation of Arthur Somers Roche's novel, "Penthouse," will be shown Thursday. In the cast are Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy, and Charles Butterworth. An extra attraction is the short subject, "The Three Little Pigs," from which came the popular song, "Who's Afraid of the Big Bad Wolf?"

GRID TEAMS ARE AGAIN IN UPSET

Washington and Lee gave the roaring Tiger of Princeton its biggest scare of the current gridiron season. Princeton scored a one-touchdown victory, 6-0, over the Washington and Lee contingent.

Yale Loses First
Undeclared Yale succumbed to the cadets of West Point yesterday by a larger score than was anticipated, 21-0. Evidently the soldiers found it rather simple to combat Reggie Root's modified Notre Dame system.

Georgia kept her slate absolutely clean by vanquishing N. Y. U., 25-0, little Homer Key running wild. The boys from Athens are going place this year. Down south N. C. State tied Davidson, 6-6, this being the third time in three weeks that the "Wolves" of Raleigh have fought tie games.

For the third time in this season the Volunteers of Tennessee have been beaten. This time the Florida "Gators" ran rampant over the "Vols," 13-6.

PROUTY AND DOUGLAS STUDY STRATIGRAPHY

Dr. W. F. Prouty and Dr. J. G. Douglas of the geology department spent last week-end in eastern Tennessee making geological observations concerning Silurian stratigraphy.

The professors checked up on various viewpoints raised by their work in the same section this summer. Fossil collections were made in order to prove certain geological facts, verifying previous suppositions. Through their work they hope to discover the extent and the common relationship of the various geological formations in the Appalachian highlands.

Collins' Men Battle Tornado to 10-6 Score

(Continued from page three) on Tech's 16 yard mark with a half minute to play. Dropping back, Jackson let go another pass which had 9,000 Carolina rooters' prayers on it, but Brandt in the end zone was too popular with the Tornado defense and they knocked it down to end Carolina's last scoring threat.

The alumni-bed-room football players saw a vastly improved Carolina team fight the Tech team off its feet, and except for a momentary lapse should have scored an unexpected win. Two beautiful passes from Jackson which had handles on them were messed up by Carolina men when they were in the clear for touchdowns.

Defensive Good
And the defensive work the Tar Heels exhibited was of the highest class. . . time after time the whole line broke through to smother Tech backs, with Barclay, Daniel, Tatum Collins and Kahn performing brilliantly.

The excellent kicking of Charlie Woollen kept the Carolina aggregation in front the first half, his long spirals carrying sometimes for 50-yards. The drive of Mac Bell when the going got tough was a pleasure to see. Jackson did some of the best tossing seen in Kenan stadium this year while Barwick and Brandt and Burnett did some mighty fine receiving.

The work of the Tar Heel machine when Tech reached her ten yard mark in the third quarter was the best defensive stance seen this season here. After the fourth down, Tech's progress was backward and "Chuck" Collins' team took the ball on her 18-yard mark.

A hard driving back in Phillips and a little mite of a quarterback named Roberts, with Galloway greatly aiding them, did all the good ground gaining for Tech. Roberts was like a pick pocket in a subway crowd in his elusiveness returning punts while Phillips did some pile-driving that any coach would like to see on his team. D. Wilcox and Lackey in the line were towers of strength for the Techmen.

With the fine exhibition of class demonstrated by the Tar Heels yesterday there is no reason for pessimism in future games. Chuck's team will be hard to beat from now on.

Carolina scored seven first downs to Tech's eight gaining 98 yards out of 15 attempted passes. Tech scored only 29 via the pass route.

Campus Women Scorn Scientific Marriage Rules

Twenty-five women of the University of Chicago who were recently interviewed by The Daily Maroon rejected the theories of modern sociologists, namely, that longer courtships before marriage were best in the long run.

The opinion commonly expressed was that couples who waited too long would never be happily married.

The "marriage index chart," which is now being prepared, points out the fact that college graduates have a better chance for happiness than those of lower education.

New Plan Adopted at Temple

Temple University of Philadelphia has adopted a unique plan this year by allowing 40 of its most brilliant freshmen to be put into an experimental group which will not be required to follow the regular student routine.

These students, picked from competitive examination in a field of 300 applicants, will be left wholly self-reliant. There will be no marks, no definite course of study, no compulsory class attendance, but students are honor-bound to co-operate with the university. World problems and their solving will be studied during the first two years and students will have choice of their specialty in latter two years.
