GREEN READS NEW DRAMA TO ACTORS

Latest Play of Noted Author,
"Enchanted Maze," to Have
World Premiere Here Soon

"How can the University teach me my place in the scheme of life?" is the query of Bill Parker, a University senior, who is disillusioned by the varied teachings of his professors in Paul Green's new play, "The Enchanted Maze."

Before an enthusiastic audience of would-be players in his production yesterday afternoon, Mr. Green read parts of the script and explained the general nature of the play as a preparation for the tryouts last night.

Mr. Green said that he hoped parts of the play would not be objectionable, even though they are taken from the forbidden subjects discussed in "bull sessions" and from the inner minds of University students.

The theme centers around Bill Parker, who was named for William Carter, a capitalistic alumnus of the University, who plans to establish himself forever in the memory of his Alma Mater by erecting a bell tower. Billy, the president of the student body, honor student and most popular man on the campus, becomes tired of kow-towing to the big American success and his ideals—and thereby hangs the tale.

He is bewildered by the greatly diverging hypotheses of living as expounded to him by his professors of astronomy, philosophy, biology, and psychology, typical of all universities, and seeks the real answer to his problem, which unfortunately, the university can not supply.

With him in this dilemma are his friends, typical university students, who are beset with the same difficulties but who do not think as seriously about the matter as Billy does.

GREEN ADDRESSES FRESHMAN CLASS

Playwright Says Present Conditions Far from Satisfactory

Every college student is faced with three great problems, Paul Green, author and playwright, told the freshmen at their regular assembly yesterday.

Every man, he said, must determine for himself his attitude toward government, religion and ethics. He must decide what type of government he will support and he must set up for himself a code of morals by which he can direct his life.

Green pointed out that present conditions are far from satisfactory and said that it is up to the people of today to improve them. New ideas of government and morals must be adopted and put into effect, he asserted.

"Tack" Hammer, "Front" Page Offer "Interesting Proposition" to Greatly Subsidized Football Star, Snatching Him
from Underhanded Yackety-Bucs

By United we Press

Like a bolt from the blue, the Tar-Mag athletic commission pulled a "fasty" on the underhanded Yackety-Bucs yesterday when it sub-subsidized Pete "Poison" Ivey, recently stolen from the Tar-Mag line-up by opposition blood money.

Claiming that turn about was fair play, co-generals Phil "Tack" Hammer and Bob "Front" Page approached Ivey with an "interesting proposition." He accepted without thinking.

"After all, even football players have to make a living," the short, fleet Ivey told a United we Press staff correspondent. "Besides," he continued his endless drivel, "I'd rather play for the

CAMPUS KEYBOARD

We are sorry we threw what turned out to be a little bombshell into the political ranks yesterday. The politicians, of course, were not afraid of anything, but they were a little disturbed that such foreign and subversive doctrines as anti-politics should pop up its lousy little head on the campus.

We'll just blunder along and get all mixed up but it will be a lot of fun. You see, we admit before we get started that we're not as smart as the campus politicians. If we were, we wouldn't advocate staff elections; no sir, we'd just spread our fostering wing over our choices and ease along unperturbedly with the realization that if we play the game right, our choices will blossom forth without any trouble.

When we arrived in this type-writer-infested room three years ago, there were 30 other new men tagging along too, and we all wanted to be editor. Well, the first spring came and there was a terrible political fight, in which the politician defeated the journalist. Exit 10 of the nice
