Barrett Urges Party Cooperation

 leaves out of its program the social and economic advancement of the masses of the people is a lifeless and useless religion. Certainly, then, a political party that leaves out of its program a determined effort to serve the masses cannot hope to be successful."

Defeat

Mr. Barrett stated that in every instance since the days of Lincoln that the Republican party has suffered a major defeat, it was due to its failure to cooperate with labor and the masses of the people.

"Our party will survive, and once again come into power, if the young people will step back over the past generation and begin where patriots left off and plunderers took charge of our party affairs, and re-dedicate it to the high and holy purpose which gave it birth, that is, to the cause of human liberty and the advancement of mankind," continued Mr. Barrett.

"Our party preserved this nation, perpetuated our democracy, sustained our one flag, guarded our interests and directed our destiny until the United States of America became a nation that was the ideal nation of the world, an inspiration to, yet envied by, the peoples of the earth."

Mr. Barrett then attacked "the Mark Hannas" of the party who allowed "the agencies of combined wealth and industrial power to gain absolute control of the Republican party, so that the rank and file of the Republicans could not be heard."

Downfall

It was this, he declared, which led to the downfall of the party when Woodrow Wilson was elected and again in 1932. Labor could not possibly support such agencies, he declared.

"I firmly believe that this country would never have had Woodrow Wilson as President, nor would it have had Franklin D. Roosevelt as President, if our party leaders had played fairly with the rank and file," he continued.

"I want you to remember that every national defeat of the Republican party has been caused largely, if not wholly, by the vote of labor which was forced to turn to the Democratic party in protest against the policies of those in charge of the Republican party."

Mr. Barrett then declared that the American Federation of Labor represents the most intelligent element of labor, and that no political party can be successful without the support of that element. "No political party can have the support of the American Federation of Labor unless that party can convince the labor that it is to labor's interests to have that party in power," he continued.

Concerning the work on the campus here, Mr. Barrett said he was "glad to see young women taking part in this organization." He was speaking of Miss Frances Johnson, head of the Young Republicans' clubs, who was largely responsible for rehabilitating the party on the campus.

"I wish you well in your work, and confidently look to the young Republicans of this state and nation to lead the party of my fathers back to that high plane of genuine service to mankind which it occupied when it was known and recognized and respected as the Grand Old Party of Lincoln, of common justice, of effective service to all mankind."

Following the address, professors and students engaged in an open forum discussion of the Republican party and American Federation of Labor.

Sigma Nu Repeats

 Fearing (SPE) proved himself a true jack-of-all trades when he won the 175 lb. championship by a fall over Faircloth (Lewis). Fearing, who had to forfeit his fight in the boxing finals because of a Playmaker engagement, used every ounce of his tremendous strength in subduing the red-headed Faircloth.

In the last fight of the tourney, Stricker (Mangum), defending heavyweight, relinquished his crown to Merrow (Phi Kappa Sigma) in a slow struggle that Merrow took with a 0:30 fall in the first period.

So ended the largest tournament in the history of intramural sports at this University. Out of an original entry of 167, eight men came through to claim medals for themselves, and, in two cases, titles for their teams. Up until the finals, two mats were used to facilitate the handling of the bouts, and ringmaster Herman R. Schnell successfully ran the proceedings from the sidelines.

Coach Quinlan commented favorably on the matches, and said that he was positive a winning freshman team could be built from such an abundance of material.

Last night the YM-YWCA reviewed a list of pertinent questions to be dealt with during the conference.

The large group in charge of arrangements for the conference was divided into seven smaller and more workable committees. These were: platform, classroom seminar, interviews and personal work, fraternities and other social groups, exhibits, and publicity.

 ed on the West Coast. The Pacific Coast conference has been doing without the jump for years. They said it sped the game up and made it more interesting. Finally last spring, the cage powers that be decided to make the center jump after each fieldgoal a thing of the past.

The Carolina White Phantoms continued its work for the coming season at the Tin Can yesterday afternoon. The cage season opens in Chapel Hill January 4, against Atlantic Christian college. The team will practice till the end of this quarter, lay off a week, and come back a week before the start of next quarter. The first 15 men will be invited to early practice.

Practice yesterday was devoted to break plays and passing work. The first string practiced against two second squad guards, while a second team worked against third flight guards. The number one outfit lined up with Ruth, Mullis, Dillworth, McCachren, and Grubb.

While the Phantoms are practicing, other teams around the state are playing games. State and Duke have already opened their seasons in discouraging manners. Both teams played the crack McCrary Eagles of Ashboro, and both outfits were dropped. State fell 50-38, and Duke lost 52-38.
