

Two Student Backed Projects

plant, has a monopoly on the laundry, the electricity—both power and repair—and electrical supplies. There is very little difference between its laundry rates and that of independent laundries in other towns. Also there have been many objections to the rates charged for electrical repairs.

The Chapel Hill townspeople and merchants object to this. They feel that they are paying a profit into the State through this and that the State, in addition, competes with them through the Book-Ex and the dormitory stores run in connection with the Book-Ex.

Profit-Non-Profit

If the Book-Ex were run on University property as a non-profit organization aiding students to save their money, there would be some excuse for its existence, say the merchants. But for it to operate as a store on a profit basis with tax exemption is unfair to them as they pay taxes and try to compete with it.

The University administration realizes the power which these arguments would have in the State legislature and has so far prevented the situation from coming to a real show-down. But the situation is such that any further step in this line by the University is likely to blow the lid off.

It's rather like the situation between private business and public utilities; both sides recognize the need where there is no conflict with private business, as in the case of the laundry; but if the University were to back a cleaners in Chapel Hill where there are already five, then it would be interfering with private enterprise. The same applies to the proposed movie theater. There would be no conflict as long as commercial pictures weren't shown.

Fall Quarter Athletics

Duke

Thus ended the intersectional tilts for Chapel Hill, and the concentrating centered on Duke (misspelled Dook). The Harriers undergo preparations for undefeated Davidson; Strain beats Rider in the upper class tennis tournament when the latter is forced to forfeit after twisting his ankle; the mural football race gets hotter and hotter with only Phi Delta Theta, Beta Theta Pi, Lewis, Ruffin and Carr still undefeated, and olympic star Hal Osborn visits the Hill. Oh yes, I almost forgot, the varsity is practicing for the Davidson game Saturday.

More Duke

Lange finds the Blue Devils stronger than ever and both the cross country and the football teams are about ready for the Dukesters.

The freshmen go to Virginia and drop a close one; the Harriers, still led by Hendrix, trounce Duke. The picture of the entire team is thrown across the front page. Everyone is saying less than nothing. Nobody knows anything. The zero hour approaches.

Der Tag

Comes Saturday morning and the entire campus, except some four students, leave for Duke—and get there. Comes Saturday afternoon and 45,000 people jam into Duke stadium under fair skies, beautiful weather and happy with light hearts. Comes Saturday evening, and the Duke scoreboard reads as follows: Torso—14 (that's us); Dook—6. Comes Saturday night—Duke is sick; Carolina is nuts again.

Incidentally, WE WON!

After the lull and storm and everything else climaxed by apologies from us to them, etc., things quiet down and straighten out again. The basketball team begins practice for the coming season which opens January 4; the fencers receive official recognition and start doing things and going places (soon they'll get there, we are told); the soccer team is about ready to meet Duke and Doc Siewert gets sick. Hence only a scrimmage; nobody knows who is conference champ but we know we're the best; the Tar Babies are rounding into fine shape for the freshman football classic at Charlotte Saturday with the Blue Imps.

Husky Trophy

Grantland Rice presents the Tar Heels with the Huskie Trophy for being the nation's outstanding team of the week by virtue of its "upset" (part-quote Durham Sun) of Duke, and so Co-Captains Crowell Little and Andy Bershak are given watches for a good time; the conference track meet is soon to be held here; Harry March walks off (quite fast) with the Cake Race and a big cake for Lewis.

The Tar Babies get hot and we all discover Lalanne is sweet, romping 67 yards for the winning touchdown. Dale Ranson comes out of hibernation to climax another colorful season with the Southern Conference championship—for a change. And, of course, Hendrix leads the pack. Later he's elected captain.

Virginia

Now the Thanksgiving football game. Carolina versus its traditional rival—Virginia. Many of the stars of the team are to sing their swan songs—and mighty prettily too. Yes, we won again. Final season standings—Won—7, Lost—1, Tied—1 and 13th in the nation over a five year period, (19th this year). A record well worth being proud of.

The high schools battle it out on Kenan's turf for the state title to close the gates of the memorial stadium for another year. Boxing and wrestling murals take the campus lead while outside interest centers around All-Americans.

Bershak

Co-Captain Andy Bershak is chosen on the NEA and the Intercollegiate Sports Writers' first team All-American and the first team AP All-Southern to say nothing of his many second string berths on the other honor elevens. George Watson receives two trophies for blocking while Tom Burnette is picked by Sports Illustrated magazine as the best placement kicker in the nation. Every outfit against which the Tar Heels played picks at least Handy Andy on its all-opponent squad if not Bartos, Little, Ditt or some others. Then, some enthusiastic Pennsylvanian picks Elmer Wrenn on his All-Animal team. Naturally, everyone knows by now about College Humor's choice of North Carolina as eighth best in the world of sports—"Tops in the South."
