A PRACTICAL LEGISLATURE

Are you in favor of the campus legislature proposal? In weighing the issue, voters can ask themselves two questions: (1) Is there a need for a campus legislature, or is the proposal "philosophical speculation" on the part of "activity men?" and (2) Will the plan proposed be successful in meeting that need?

In answering the first question, Bob Magill listed 28 specific instances arising this year when the student council was forced to make legislative decisions that may or may not have been the democratic sentiment of the student body.

Magill and the council have shown the need in the inner circles of student government. A need of a government is a need of the people it governs.

The need for a legislature is a practical need to facilitate the functionings of student government. Actually student government will be made more democratic, general campus interest in the student body's collective business may be sharpened—but such is a by-product of the plan's more practical aspect that some organ of student government must be created to make decisions for the campus.

Will the Plan Work?

The plan proposed is simple and flexible. It takes no claim to being a constitution for future student government. It is brief document. But it does not immediately follow that it is inadequate.

All legislative powers of the student body, say the drafters, should be vested in the legislature. Ultimate control remains in the hands of the campus itself, since the student body has the power of referendum on 16 per cent petition.

To encourage thoughtful action by representatives, the committee of drafters gives the council the power of veto. But that veto is subject to a two-thirds override by the legislature.

Financial measures, in respect to campus pocketbooks, require the consideration of a two-thirds favorable vote.

The 48 representatives may be chosen by a variety of means, ranging from selection by the interfraternity and interdormitory councils to election of ten members-at-large by the legislature itself. The ideal is a proportional, accurate reflection of the campus.

If the plan is not adequate, if experience shows it to be impractical, the legislature itself can change any part of it except the section on "powers."

In the long run perspective, the success or failure of the plan would hardly depend on the machinery that Bob Magill's committee has set up. It is formed so that it would change with the experience of student government.

If the plan is adopted, its fate will lie in the hands of future campus personalities that will be connected with it.

DIRTY WORK AT THE CROSS-ROADS

Hazing has been officially abolished at the University, but many of the visiting motorists who passed through the East Gate of the campus last Sunday got a good taste of it. Drawn to Chapel Hill by a particularly alluring combination of state-wide publicity on the University village's floral display and the new gymnasium, these transient guests of the state University were met with what could hardly be considered hospitality or even courteousness.

Clustered on the corners of the East Gate's cross-streets were quadrangelites (apparently) who had a good afternoon's fun after the manner of a grade school recess. "This way to the new gymnasium!" No, this way! "Whoa there!" Finally some ingenious soul even secured a policeman's whistle and contrived further to confuse motorists entering a strange town.

Now the visitors took all this good-naturedly, and in spite of their shameful reception succeeded in absorbing great quantities of Chapel Hill's natural and cultural beauty. But such conduct was quite unnecessary on the part of any group of students. These motorists are invited guests of the village and the University, and as such should be accorded all the hospitality ordinarily traditional in Chapel Hill.

On the next two week-ends the gardens of Chapel Hill will be holding open-house to the state, and therefore there will be a similar influx of visiting motorists. In preparation, the University is arranging with the city fathers to have an officer on duty at the East Gate to control traffic, an officer who will doubtless be able to control traffic by himself. And so in the spirit of the occasion, students should see that the affair runs off as smoothly as possible, since they, as much as the administration or the villagers, share the role of host to the people of the state.

"A Poem"

The following poem was written by Lawrence Hinkle and delivered during coronation exercises of Student-Faculty day:

My friends, if I may call you friends,
Who've gathered here for sundry ends
—The most, I think, to see at play,
Those ponderous beasts who hold at bay

Their cringing classes every morn,
(Except forsooth,
Such guileless youth
As came in late with face unshorn,
And then became a trifle bored
And curled up in the rear and snored.)

But I digress—my soul be blessed,
I really should keep off digress—
The faculty, of whom I speak,
Today you'll find are very meek,
And though they're not entirely tame
They're definitely not the same.
In fact, if you're a fearless man,
You can even feed them from your hand;

But if you lure them from their lair
To try this feat, do have a care
(They wouldn't bite you—certainly not—
But still, they eat an awful lot.)

My Friends, do homage to our King!
—Please do; it's such a little thing—
The tamest of these awesome men
Did very gladly condescend
To sit upon our throne today
And over all our fun hold sway.
He is a gentle king and good,
Most generous of the royal blood,
For poor is the man—quite poor, I say—
To whom he will not give an "A."

Our Queen—my Friends, for words I lack—
She is the fairest of the Shack,
In all our school the fairest lass
Who ever primped her hair on class.
As fitting for this Queen of Queens,
Her courtiers are ferocious Deans,
Who sit before her quiet and meek,
And speak to all who to them speak,
But cannot answer any queries,
Since they don't have their secretaries.

Have fun, my friends, have fun and play!
The truce will last but for a day!
Peace be on earth, good will toward men,
'Till classes shall begin again!
The lion shall lie down with the lamb!
The egg shall scramble with the ham,
Come, Carolina's sons and daughters,
Come cast your bread upon the waters!

If you take him out and feed him free,
Your prof may let you fix that "E."

( ) Those In The Running ( )

Elizabeth Malone ...

Nominated from the floor at the Woman's association meeting, Elizabeth Malone was selected to oppose the candidate of the council nominating committee for president of the association.

Since arriving here from Grenada college in Mississippi, she has been appointed to the junior class executive committee, appointed to the YWCA publicity committee, and the Student-Faculty Day coronation committee.

Miss Malone was one of two juniors selected to make the annual Playmaker tour, and was director of the Mid-Winters Cabaret held in the Carolina Inn.

In coed athletics she has participated in archery and bowling tournaments of the Woman's Athletic association. She recently was elected to serve on the student vestry of the Episcopal church.

Although Miss Malone received a scholarship to All Saints college in Mississippi for achievement in scholarship and leadership, she attended Grenada where, in her second year, she was president of the Pan-American Student forum and Mardi Gras queen in 1936.

Other offices held at Grenada included vice-president of the Little Theater, member of the Athletic council, and author of the class day prophecy.

During 1936-37 she served as assistant director of dramatics in Clarksdale (Miss.) high school while taking a commercial course.

Council Ratifies Legislature Proposal

The latter four organizations were selected to be represented because they collect student fees, and consequently their budgets would be in a position for the legislature to pass on them.

The text of the proposed plan was presented in yesterday's DAILY TAR HEEL. In its first form the plan was drawn up by Allen Merrill and Jim Joyner, appointed by Magill from a committee of 10 selected to draft the plan.

The plan grew out of the increasing need for a means of the student body to function as a legislative group. The council in the past has had no legislative power that has not been contested.

In its judicial capacity the council has jurisdiction over any misconduct. In 1926 it extended its jurisdiction to surveillance over the conduct in office of student officers.

Anne Perry ...

Miss Anne Perry, nominating committee selection for presidency of next year's Woman's association, is good proof that the "weaker sex" cannot be outdone when it comes to going in for extra-curricular activities.

Since transferring from Smith college, where she participated in every branch of student activity, she has held numerous important positions here.

She has especially been identified with YWCA work at the University. She was chairman of the Human Relations committee of the YWCA and chairman of the Venidas peace group. She was the University YWCA representative at the Christian Youth Movement meeting at Oxford, Ohio, and the YWCA appointed her to represent it at Washington for the conference with NYA officials on federal aid for education.

Miss Perry is a member of the executive committee of the Southeastern International Relations conference. Other activities of this, her first year here, include vice-presidency of the Carolina League for International Cooperation and membership on the Carolina Magazine staff.

At Smith college, she was freshman class representative on the Smith college Association for Christian Work, member of the American Student union, chairman of the Freshman Friendship council, co-chairman of the Campus Peace committee, member of the steering committee for an anti-war strike, representative of her school at a World Youth congress, representative on the Emergency Peace campaign, and her school's delegate to the Student Conference of Northeastern colleges.

McNinch Asked To Cancel Speech

Copies of Edwin S. Smith's recent Memorial hall speech will be available in the YMCA office tomorrow, so it has been necessary to request for the speech overran the reprint more copies.

At yesterday's meeting union members discussed plans for taking in new members this spring. Several new ideas were proposed in this regard, and one, which will probably be announced in the near future, was tentatively accepted.

PLEDGE DONALD DUCK

Theta Chi House—Yesterday Walt Disney officially approved the pledging of Donald Duck to Carolina's Theta Chi fraternity.

"After some deliberation, Mr. Donald Duck has agreed to become an honorary member of Alpha Eta Chapter (of Theta Chi), and I think his decision was brought about entirely by your mention of certain dates, so we hope the girls don't forget him!

"Sincerely yours,
"Walt Disney Productions, Ltd."

To Fritz Banner goes credit for Donald's pledging. His letter to Hollywood was a masterpiece of absentee rushing, making special mention of the tender attention Donald would receive at the hands of our 300 co-eds.

A pledge pin for Pledge Duck will probably be sent within the next few days. He will be granted full privileges.

Now the fraternity in Kansas which pledged Charlie McCarthy last year hasn't a thing on Carolina!

MASTER BAMBOOZLER

Matty Geis, coach of the Princeton team which ran here yesterday afternoon, obviously came to Chapel Hill intent on bamboozling naive Carolinians.

First day he was here he got our Coach Dale Ranson into a game of tossing javelins at squares of tin for pennies, and nearly stripped him of a month's salary. Then he swore that his team's trainer, Arthur Larson, was once chief masseur to the King of Sweden.

Next he assured a DAILY TAR HEEL sports reporter that one of the Princeton hurdlers, named O. B. Joyful, had slept through Durham on the train and was lost somewhere in eastern North Carolina.

Both the name and the story smelled fishy to Shelley Rolfe, who made up his mind to hit back at Geis's prankishness as Writer Rolfe was enjoying Student-Faculty day in Southern Pines. To Matty Geis, Rolfe and a companion sent this telegram, collect:

"DEAR COACH. WILL BE BACK IN TIME FOR SACK RACE TOMORROW. O. B. JOYFUL."

That should shut up the prankster from New Jersey!

Yesterday Writer Rolfe went down to get the Carolina-Princeton track meet line-up. First he gaped, then he ran, when he saw listed as the visitors' No. 4 hurdler Otto B. Joyful.

JUDGMENT WITHOUT PREJUDICE

To the Editor,
Dear Editor:

I believe I did not make myself clear in my statement to the TAR HEEL concerning the system of nominations and elections among the women students.

The nominating board for this year was fairly and thoughtfully chosen, and included representatives from all women's groups. However, the plan suggested which requires that nominations from the floor must be passed by a majority of those present does not seem entirely democratic. I would favor a plan whereby those desiring to suggest a nominee present a petition signed by a representative number of women.

I believe that the nominating board should include the president of the Woman's association and three members from each of the three women's groups on the campus as did this year's Board. I feel that the decisions of this group would most nearly satisfy all women's factions if each elected its own representatives.

Also, it seems illogical that members of the Women's association who only come to the meeting in which nominations are presented should have as much voice in nominations as those who come regularly. For a stronger and more intelligent form of women's government I suggest that only those women be allowed to take part in nominations and elections who have come to a certain number of Woman's association meetings.

Let's vote this year with judgment and forget our prejudices.

Sincerely,
POLLY POLLOCK.
