posing faction. He realizes that, despite their defeat, the faction represents the freshman class, too. As soon as different possibilities have been investigated, the committees, now somewhat tentative, will have additions.

Spillman must realize that the president has not been in a position where he could have necessary personal contacts with all members of the freshman class. It is human that he should observe carefully before completing his committee appointments, and he can do that only by gradually bringing in men suited to administrative work, men who will work to one end—the class of '42.

picture. A well-patronized refreshment stand was in the lobby. Pop bottles and popcorn were popular, and peanuts took the form of flying missiles. Petty fights often brewed into real controversies, and the constable had to be called in many instances.

REELS WOULD BREAK

Films invariably broke in the middle of stirring, heart-gripping scenes. Mary Pickford would be cornered by a brute; Pearl White would be thrown off a cliff; Harold Lloyd, falling from a skyscraper; Jackie Coogan, being mauled by a villain; or Gilda Gray, the "shimmy" girl, might be kicking the gong around. No difference, the boys would shout and cat-call and demand their money back. Threats were seldom carried out. And when the flickers were patched and started over again, all would quiet down to a conversational tone.

And every time the operator seemed not to focus the film well enough to strike the screen, the boys would shout "frame it." A veritable lingo developed, and the operator took his cues from the odd-sounding shouts from the audience.

The Pick building was used for band rehearsals several months. And for the past few years, it has been used as a meeting place for the municipal court.

With the opening of the new Pick, students of this more sophisticated generation will be greeted with something entirely new in North Carolina motion picture houses. The five hundred-odd seats will be staggered, allowing each person to view the picture without having to adjust himself to the person sitting in front. Each will have a clear, unobstructed view of the screen.

Bob also plays the trombone in the University band and in the University symphony orchestra. He will receive his degree in instrumental music next year. Bob holds the distinction of winning the state trombone contest for two successive years. For five years he has been a member of the North Carolina Symphony orchestra.

Bob is assistant Master Bellringer, and his room-mate, Bill Benton, holds the title of Master Bellringer. His job is to go to the belltower each afternoon at 5 o'clock, and play the chimes for a fifteen minute period. And playing the chimes is a full-sized "man's job."
