GRAHAM SAYS

"This means," President Graham declared, "that the amount tentatively recommended by the joint committee is not only more than $400,000 under the current appropriations for the biennium, but is also considerably under the amount that the Budget commission had in mind.

"The apparently contradictory situation and resultant confusion seems due to the fact that the Budget commission, in recommending appropriations for the University included estimated receipts from tuition increases for all students and then proceeded to deduct a corresponding amount from the general fund appropriation it recommended.

Using the Chapel Hill unit as an example, it was pointed out that the Budget commission recommended a yearly appropriation from the general fund of $565,703 and added to it $181,500 which it estimated would come from the increase in tuition for all students for a total of $747,203.

The appropriations committee voted a yearly appropriation from the general fund of $614,821, and added to that the $75,000 which it estimated would come from the increase in tuition for out-of-state students for a total of $689,821.

"Thus, the difference of $57,382 between the $747,203 total recommended by the Advisory Budget commission and the $689,821 voted by the committee is the actual cut in funds," Graham concluded.

sult in the concerted action of thinking people in this section toward constructive legislation which will give the South her rightful place in the sun and help her cease to be the Nation's Number One Economic Problem.

REGIONAL DIRECTOR

Only a few people on campus know that W. T. Couch is also Regional Director of the Federal Writers' project, and that Chapel Hill is regional headquarters for work being done by the Writers' Project in the seven Southeastern states of Virginia, the two Carolinas, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama and Florida.

The most important and far-reaching work being undertaken by the Project at the present time is the compilation and publication of State Guide books and, particularly in this area, the collection of life histories.

As director of the University of North Carolina press Mr. Couch has been interested for many years in getting important information about the South made available to the people of this region. Six months ago, after thorough consideration by the Board of Governors of the Press, he accepted a part-time position as Regional Director of the FWP because this position provided an opportunity to get a number of books written which otherwise apparently could not be done.

The Guide Books provide on each state information which never before has been available. Each one, though possessing distinguishing marks of individuality, follows a more or less common plan. General information is followed by a calendar of events; then a series of essays covering every significant phase of the State's growth, history and background, both commercial and artistic, is set forth. Certain prominent cities of special interest to tourists are treated separately, and all other cities and towns are comprehensively covered by a network of explanatory tours which honey-combs the state.

Reviewers have expressed the opinion that the Guide Books in the long run will prove of greater and more lasting value than the buildings, bridges, roads and other works of steel and mortar, because the books will be here and will be used as sources of information long after the materials used in construction have crumbled to dust.

The collected life histories are most interesting. They consist of interviews with tenant farmers, farm owners, cotton mill villagers, and persons in service occupations such as lumbering, mining, fishing, turpentine, carpentry, shoemaking, etc.

The drama, the humor, the pathos and the stark reality of the stories that have been turned in cannot be matched by any tale of fiction. "The short and simple annals of the poor" are no more lacking in vital interest than the most important news story of the day. It is while reading such stories that we realize the truth of the old bromide, "One half doesn't know how the other half lives." The fact that every word written into these stories is verifiable, that the "punch" comes from the stories themselves and not from the manner of telling (as most of them are submitted by people with limited writing experience) makes them all the more fascinating to the student of psychology and sociology.

Couch states that his particular reason for research of this sort along the lines of tenant-farmer relationships is because "in my opinion the South will have tenancy for a long time to come, and the most important problem we face is that of establishing good relations between landlord and tenant . . . stories of landlords and tenants who have good relationships . . . we are convinced will throw light on possible ways of solving some of the most difficult problems of this region."

to develop these youngsters with an eye towards turning out first rate football teams in the future."

The squad has been working over the rough spots which showed up in last Saturday's practice game. Judging by the improvement shown during yesterday's and Tuesday's sessions, the coming game ought to be the first of three high class affairs. The fresh man players are working into the plays better, among other things. In fact, winter practice is all sweetness and light these days . . . except for the mud.

counting last night's game with Davidson, Duke has been beaten by Maryland, Brown, and Army in its last three outings.

Ben Dilworth will go into the Duke game as high Carolina scorer for the year. Getting eight points against Davidson Tuesday, he ran his season total to 103, taking a two point lead over Jimmy Howard. Cap'n Bill McCachren, George Glamack, Paul Severin, and Les Branson follow in that order.

legislature. Those 12 signers were only exercising their powers as members in calling for said meeting, and were taking a definite stand against either; (1) Abolition of intercollegiate boxing at Carolina; Or, (2) Abolition of the debate fee.

"These bills were in the hands of the Ways and Means committee prior to the circulation of the petition, and the signers, myself included, of the petition were in no way responsible for originating said bills. Their interest was only in having a meeting called, and in seeing these bills pushed to the front."

NEW COMMITTEE

Included also in the legislature's calendar for discussion tonight is a bill that would provide for the setting up of a committee of three to work out the functions and the details of a Student Safety council which would have delegated judicial authority from the Student council over matters of student negligence, carelessness, recklessness, or general lack of responsibility in handling an automobile.

Another bill to be taken up for action, if approved, would change the method of selection for the cheerleaders. The proposed plan of selection is modeled along the system by which managers of athletic teams are chosen.

also was defeated for the first time this year, as the Duke relayists won a small lead.

The Carolina freshmen, waiting the Massanutten meet here Friday afternoon, will not practice this afternoon, nor will the varsity.

WON TITLE

The Massanutten team has won the Virginia state title for the past six years, with a National Interscholastic Championship in 1936. Earlier this year the military academy men placed second in the open AAU meet in Washington, D. C., and last Saturday they were second in the Lehigh university Interscholastic meet. Massanutten holds three victories, two over Western high school of Washington and the other over Tome institute, while the Tar Babies have wins over Goldsboro high and the State frosh.

Alumnus To Lead Little Symphony entirely of soloists and therefore presents interpretations quite different from those heard by the larger orchestras.

The Little Symphony has at least one of all the instruments used in the larger symphonies and has, in addition, many advantages peculiar to itself. It can bring to life much beautiful music of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries that was written for orchestral groups similar to the Little Symphony, and which has been neglected, not because it has lost its Little Symphony, and which has been few orchestras properly proportioned for playing it.

In addition to this feature, being made up entirely of soloists, the group can offer many arias in a vein much lighter than can be given the more ponderous, large groups.

MAESTRO

Thor Johnson, talented young conductor of the group, has been very active in music circles since his early youth. He organized his first orchestra in Winston-Salem at the age of fourteen and was later leader of a small band here at Chapel Hill. A member of the University Symphony orchestra for all of his four years here, he was associate conductor in his senior year and received much recognition for his work here. The Carolina Tunesmiths, Johnson's swing band, later toured Europe and were most enthusiastically received there.

After graduating from the University here he went to the University of Michigan where he received his Masters degree in music. While there he organized the Little Symphony orchestra of which he has been director ever since, with the exception of one year. In 1936 he was awarded a Beebe scholarship which entitled him to a year of study in Europe.

WELL KNOWN

After his return from Europe, Johnson began touring with the Little Symphony orchestra and has continued to be director of the group. Unique in its size and presentations, the group has played over 200 concerts in nearly every state in the union in the past two years and has been most enthusiastically received at every appearance.

Due to the large audience expected tonight in Hill Music hall, everyone is asked to be seated promptly at 8:30 in order to facilitate perfect functioning of the program.

professors so that each may have a personal copy for thorough examination and continued reference. According to In stitute Chairman John Kendrick, a number of faculty members whose courses coincide with the subject matter outlined in the booklet are planning to use this material before the institute opens.

The story of this organization began in 1927 when a group of 15 students and a like number of faculty members of the University met to discuss what they considered a definite lack of social consciousness on the University campus at that time.

PREVIOUS ATTEMPTS

From time to time various organizations, chiefly the YMCA, had brought speakers here with but flash-in-the-pan results.

This group calling itself the Human Relations institute, felt that if a program could be set up which would lay down a barrage along the whole front line of world problems with a large company of prominent speakers and leaders, for an entire week, there would be few individuals on the campus who could escape the effects of such firing.

A YMCA FEATURE

Initiated by the YMCA, the group brought to students that year, through classroom seminars, luncheons, dinners, and lectures, a thorough insight into the major contemporary social issues in the fields of international relations, business and industry, and interracial relations.

Along with its development, the institute established two now highly prized customs on the campus—that of inviting speakers of any belief or color and putting these same lecturers to the acid test of open forum discussions after each speech.

CHANGE

The institutes were held quadrannally then, but after the second and third meetings conducted in 1931 and 1935, a need was felt for shorter interludes between each session. The speed at which world events were moving became the chief point that influenced the 1935 committee to change to a biennial Institute of Human Relations, regardless of budget problems.

The 1937 institute added a fourth major division to its program, that on educational and social problems. This session turned out to be the most successful so far conducted and aroused interest and attendance from points beyond the University community and North Carolina.
