VICKERY, HUDSON LAST TO SEVENTH, EIGHTH INNINGS

By SHELLEY ROLFE

With both sides doing their utmost to give the game to the other, Duke and Carolina, alleged to be the two best college baseball teams in the country, met at Emerson field yesterday afternoon before some 4,500 customers, and the Blue Devils, making only three errors against four by the Tar Heels, won, 6-5, taking their ninth straight Big Five game of the season and handing Carolina its first home defeat of the season.

The two teams bent over backwards to give the battle away. Carolina and Duke alternated in making errors and giving up unearned runs. The Tar Heels proved better at the business, making one more error than the Devils and one less run. They also left 11 men on base.

Duke hopped into an early lead by making three runs on three hits and two Carolina errors in the second inning. The Tar Heels retaliated with two in their turn of the third without the help of any Blue Devil miscues and tied the game up in the fifth. After that it was every man for himself as Duke made two in the sixth, Carolina two in the seventh, and Duke the final and winning run in the eighth.

HUDSON, VICKERY

Embarrassed by the fielding lapses of their mates, Bud Hudson, starting Tar Heel hurler, and Bob Vickery, who did the opening honors for Duke, failed to last out the game. Vickery was removed in the midst of a Tar Heel rally in the seventh when our boys made two runs and threatened to keep at bat until time for the night game at Greensboro Saturday. Jim Tompkins came to Vickery's aid and managed to put the side out and hold Carolina away from the plate the rest of the game.

Big Tar Heel winner of the season, Hudson was put in the hole in the second inning when Duke made their three runs prodded along by two Carolina errors. Bud managed to get deeper and deeper into a muddle until he was removed for a pinch-hitter in the eighth inning after allowing ten hits. Sam Davis, who by actual count hurled seven innings in the Anyway you figure things, John Kenfield was quite a success at the business of coaching tennis this spring. He made the books balance way into the blue and returned a national championship team for the eighth time in years, piloting the Tar Heels through 19 straight wins against no defeats and only three tight pulls—against Princeton, Harvard and Yale on the northern trip.

And to cap the commendable fact of winning the national title, Bill Rood of the local cast snatched for himself the brightest bauble the Southern conference can bestow upon a tennis player and etc.—the singles championship. Of course, Maryland's Allie Ritzberg and Natie Askins upset the veritable Eden by snatching the doubles title, the first time in six years it has not rested in Chapel Hill, but after all you have to let the other fellows around the league win once in a while to keep their interest up.

If ever a national championship was manufactured with a lot of umph, oh very well, be academic and say determination, will to win, and the die for dear old Rutgers, Carolina and Kenfield spirit, and coaching genius, this is it. Of course Mr. Kenfield almost shrunk with horror when it was suggested coaching had a lot to do with the winning. "Never," he said, "the fellows played together and got hot at the right time and never let down. That's what turned the trick for us."

Now Mr. Kenfield may be correct there, but anybody with half an eye won't have to look far to discover this year's team was far from the best Kenfield has had to mold with in recent years. It had no really big stars who had much chance of ever amounting to anything in the hot limelight of international amateur tennis.

"Well," admitted the coach, "we didn't have any big stars as we have had in other years. In fact, the team was far from being the best we've had in recent years. Why, it really isn't as strong as last year's team. This year, though, the boys clicked together and that was all-important in winning for us."

"This year's team realized the importance of playing together. You may remember that last season we failed in the doubles at critical times. However in beating Princeton, Yale and Harvard last week we swept the doubles. You know, the doubles won for us there and they count just as much in the scoring as the singles."

One question led to another until someone in the corner who had been listening attentively perked up and asked, "what makes a good doubles player?"

"Well," Kenfield answered, "a good singles player does not necessarily make a good doubles player. Co-ordination and ability to work together with another boy makes for good doubles men. A fellow with a good overhand may not be much of a singles man but he will go over big in doubles."

Getting away from such technical matters, Kenfield was asked what about next year.

"Oh, we're losing both Roods and Fuller," he replied. "But Rider, Rawlings and Meserole among others showed enough this season to give us hope for next spring."

"Right now, I'd say Rawlings has the best chance to go places of anybody coming back. The trouble with him though is that he's too erratic. He'll play good one week and cool down another. If he can develop consistency he ought to go pretty far."

The hot and cold charge may be true concerning Rawlings. He was certainly plenty good up north when he swept his singles matches against Yale, Harvard and Princeton. And he went on into the finals of the conference singles. It might be also added that when he lost the singles finals to Rood Tuesday, Rawlings beat himself with his errors.

Rawlings, Rood and Meserole form a strong foundation for another blue-ink team next year. Kenfield thinks a stiff summer of good tennis will get the fellows up from the freshman team ready. He especially likes the looks of Harris Everett who transferred here the winter quarter and was not eligible for frosh play this spring.

But there is no use getting alarmed over the prospects, or lack of them, for next spring. If Mr. Kenfield has any kind of material he will produce not only a winning team but a close to miraculous club. He did this time out.

Bo Shepard, who watches money matters of the athletic association, rushes to the bar to explain someone read a financial statement wrong when it was charged in the DAILY TAR HEEL last week by Bill Beerman that the association had a $70,000 profit for the last fiscal year.

Bo claims the charge is untrue, and furthermore, the profit was no more than $9,000 and it was promptly turned back into new equipment for the gym. Shepard went on to say that the minute the profit reaches $70,000 he will be one of the first to rush to the bar and demand student fees be cut.

Shepard forgot to add that prospects for a $70,000 profit look exceedingly out of distance for the next few years anyhow. You know, they gotta pay for

Probable Leaders In Conference Meet

DISTANCE EVENTS TO BE CLOSEST OF CONFERENCE MEET

By LEONARD LOBRED

The distance events in the Southern Conference outdoor meet here on Fetzer field this weekend appear to be the closest and most unpredictable, just as was the case in the indoor games last winter.

Frank Cronin and Coleman Headley of Maryland, winners of the 440 and 880 last year, will not be back, but Jimmy Davis of Carolina, mile champion, and Joe Peaslee of Maryland, two mile champ, are to return to defend their titles. The field in the quarter mile is wide open to anyone, and six men are about equal.

Royce Jennings of Carolina and Harold Johnson of Duke lead the field—on paper—because of their race against each other earlier this year. Jennings' time of :48.6, a new Carolina and Fetzer field mark, was also designated as Johnson's time because Jennings' lead at the finish was only a few inches. Alan Miller of Maryland, who set a new conference indoor quarter record in winning the 440 in the indoor games, and Harvey of Washington and Lee, who won the 880 as a sophomore two years ago, have run :50 flat. Curl of W & L with a :50.1 and Ragon of the same school with a :50.3 complete the well experienced quarter field. Ochsensreiter, a star basketball player who has run second to Miller in almost all of

Mr. Mann Of Duke Spills Grid Dope

By WILLIAM L. BEERMAN

Ted Mann, Bob Madry, J. Laurence Leonard, and Houston Lawing sat in the bleachers yesterday afternoon and told naughty stories in between pitches of the Carolina-Duke heart-break. The four gentlemen are variously connected with the newspaper business, the first mentioned pair being sports publicists and the last two Greensboro sports writers.

Therefore the naughty stories. But anyway, in the course of events which transpired during the woefully warm afternoon, the foursome dropped bits of information here and there that might bear repeating. Well, Mann did.

Even with his Duke affiliation, Ted Mann is a nice guy. "Hello," he says, "how are you people on the west of Heaven?" (Figure out the location of a place once called Trinity and cuss awhile).

Mann had more to say, and while Leonard, Madry, and Lawing were arguing over the comparative merits of the two Philadelphia teams, he divulged a bit of football news. "Y'know," he confided, "that was a bunch

Indians End Season At Virginia, W&L

The Carolina Indians finish their 1939 season this weekend when they invade the Old Dominion state for battles with the Virginia and W & L lacrosse teams Friday and Saturday afternoons.

The Tar Heels can finish no better than third in the circuit, a slight improvement over last year's cellar finish. One win over the weekend will assure Carolina of the third slot but two losses will sink the ten into a last place tie with the Virginia Cavaliers. W & L's Generals will be striving to tie the Duke Blue Devils for the league diadem with a victory over the Tar Heels and they are heavy favorites to cop the crown.

Two weeks ago the Generals established themselves as the class of the
