KLINE BILL

Legislature To Have Hot Session

Tomorrow night's special session of the legislature, voted to pass the new constitution, will be interesting to members and spectators alike.

Chuck Kline, so far one of the most influential members, will endeavor to get his bill for a campus primary voted out of the ways and means. The bill was killed Friday afternoon after discussion and deliberation carried over two days.

The majority opinion was that campus elections, which now require much time and effort for candidates and party workers alike, are complicated enough.

Kline declares adoption of his bill will democratize campus elections in allowing independents a better chance to beat the party machine.

While it is agreed that independents should be allowed a fair chance to seek office, on equal terms with other candidates, we fail to see how the Kline bill will help.

Particularly obnoxious is the section allowing the winner of the run-off election between the five highest nominees to take office on a plurality. Theoretically, the class president (or any other officer) could win on one more than one-fifth of the total votes cast.

Is there any democracy in that?

If a majority is required, under the Kline recommendation, a third election will certainly result, and no one, not even the greatest of the politics-loving-politicians wish to see three elections.

The present set-up gives the independents as much chance for election as the other candidates—except that independents don't have a unified party backing. But never in the past four years has any independent been kept off the ballot if he was duly nominated on nomination day—usually held two days before the election.

Undoubtedly Mr. Kline's stated motives in originating this bill are quite valid.

But it still hasn't been proved to our satisfaction that campus elections can be made more democratic by adding ream-on-ream of red tape to an already complicated set-up.

THIEVING

Lock Your Doors Again

Thieving, a ten commandment sin, has become widespread on the campus again after student and administrative officials thought the culprits were caught.

It is known that one student, said to be a neurotic case, was suspended from the University near the end of the fall quarter.

The past three weeks has seen a renewal of stealing, and it's no longer safe to hang coats in the library, the dining hall, or any other public place. Coats seem to be particular targets. Many other items have been reported missing. Two members of the Phi Gamma Delta glee club returned to the Memorial hall dressing room after their act to find their wallets on the floor, completely devoid of money.

There seems to be little the authorities and police can do about it in a short time, though the thieves may be reminded of the grammar school declamation "Murder Will Out."

Difficulty is that more coats, money, typewriters, et al, may be stolen while the clues are growing hot.

Students should be particularly careful to lock doors at all times. Carry your money with you. For overcoats, no matter how worn, are costly to replace.

Best wishes to the Chapel Hill police.

campus primaries to be adopted by the two existing parties if they so desire. This system is designed to cut out choice of nominees by small groups, and to enable all the members of the respective parties to decide who the party will run for each office. Any member of the party on whose ticket he wishes to run, and who is also eligible according to council regulations will be allowed to run for office after a dollar filing fee has been paid to defray primary expenses.
