OUT-OF-STATE Graduation Bugaboo Again

The January issue of the Alumni Review points out a situation which vitally concerns North Carolina industry and Carl Goerch's State Magazine, through its letter-writing Colonel Yarkin, reiterates the question raised by the Review.

In the winter and spring of every year representatives of large national concerns visit colleges and universities, interview job-seekers who will receive sheepskins in June, and sign up the best talent available, leaving for North Carolina industry the remaining graduates.

"What's alarming," says the Review, "is that the vast majority of the interviewing representatives are from organizations that will take their recruits out of the state, perhaps out of the South. It all is a part of the South's business of exporting its trained manpower. North Carolina raises them, educates them, and then allows business organizations to come in and carry off their best trained graduates."

Regarding the matter from a student's viewpoint, we of course cannot blame him for his choice when a large national firm offers a position. But like the other publications, we admonish North Carolina employers to awaken to the situation, to offer positions and salaries in line with standards elsewhere, and to hold North Carolina's trained youth within the state.

SURVEY

Poll Of Student Political Opinion

"Morrison Holds Slim Marfin" was the headline in yesterday's edition.

Dr. Phil Carden and his crew of statistical experts, now on the payroll of the DAILY TAR HEEL, announced the results of the second week's poll, a scientific survey of student opinion.

Carden, who does the tabulating and supervising of the weekly questions, has had experience in this work conducting the student opinion survey for the Associated Collegiate Press, a feature we have supplied during the fall and winter quarters. Naturally, each student can not be interviewed each week, and the twenty interviewers are instructed to contact new students each week.

Many of you have already been approached by the interviewer.

Contrary to the opinions of a small minority, the DAILY TAR HEEL student opinion survey is not an effort to build up a following for particular candidates, but it is an effort—and we should be successful—to present the opinion of the student body—the opinion to be obtained from a legitimate, varied sample of the whole group.

Politics and the activities akin thereunto has become a major subject on the campus, with the two major parties organizing all the time for the annual spring political frolics. Recently, independent organizations have entered the field to "democratize campus elections." The issue has been clouded.

Before we cease publication for the quarter, results on the poll regarding third parties will be announced. And we will continue the poll up to election day.

To those skeptics who accuse falseness of purpose, we merely point out the quick demise of the ill-fated "Literary Digest," which lasted only a few issues after predicting that Alf Landon would dethrone Mr. Roosevelt in 1936.

There'll be results every week; watch for them.

Leap Year
Mickey Warren, senior Chi O who divides her time between performing the duties as secretary of the senior class and waiting for the army to camp under her front window, got restless February 29, took advantage of the extra day, and wired her uniformed lover in West Point asking him to marry her. She received the following answer. "Hell hath no fury like a woman's scorn. I will."

Oh, Romeo
Jeanne Connell, stray Greek, who has been chased by everyone except the janitor in Grimes dormitory, but whose heart really belongs to a Duke student, a childhood playmate, was on the receiving end of a saxophone serenade at 1:30 in the morning. The occasion was Jeanne's birthday; the song, "I Dream of Jeanne with the Light Brown Hair." Remarkable one coed who was awakened by the moanful sound, "That's a helluva way to dream."

Stark Realism
Mr. Hobbs, of the Carolina, not the Charlotte Hobbs, professor of law in the commerce school, told the following. It was concerning a lad who was taking a quiz in the law school. The question was, "Define a corporation." The answer given by the lad was, "A corporation is an artificial, invisible, intangible being whose soul cannot be damned and whose rear cannot be kicked." Would that I were a corporation.

A la Winchell
The success of Winchell's Sunday evening program lies not so much in the gossip he dishes out, as, in the way he dishes it out. His figures of speech, his out-of-breath attitude which makes the slightest bit of gossip assume nation-rocking importance, and, most of all, his rapid fire delivery makes it what it is. Try it yourself with these tid-bits.

spread fame for displaying two frat pins at the same time, has broadened her field. Latest reports have it that Charlie Wood, sultan of swing, is now using said pins for suspender buttons... Olivia Rhodes who brought "ahs" from the Jamboree audience with her ballet dancing has reversed her form and has now got "The Billy Campbells to Swinging"... After the break with Court Dawson, Helen Plyler turned her affections to one Mr. Ogburn whose class notes now consist entirely of Helen's "John Hancock." Mr. Dawson is now waiting in line for his turn with Ernestine Noe... Bela Orton, whose love with a recent alumnus hit the rocks last fall, is now that way with Bob Knickerbocker. Lately, she has attended Bob's classes with him. In the meantime, spring has brought the alumnus back. The Chi O's say she's in love. The question is, "Who with?"... It is generally known that two professors on the campus are spending sleepless nights since the return of an ex-waitress.

Take a Deep Breath

Johnny Jordan, newly elected campaign manager of the Rameses party denies the story in the Tar Heel that he has never done anything. Said Johnny, "I used to be superintendent of the Winton Baptist Church Sunday School"... For those who doubt the sincerity of the Rameses party, announcements will be made this weekend... The odds are 100 to 1 that Reddy Grubbs, who moved to Lewis dorm to get away from politics, will
