University May Become One of Great Centers Of Mathematical and Experimental Statistics

Buried in the news concerning new dormitories, a planetarium, portrait gallery, museum, and a foundation for scholarships for the University were a few sentences containing the far-reaching news of an All-University Institute of Statistics at State College and a graduate department of Mathematical Statistics at Chapel Hill.

Grant Received

Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the University, revealed there had been secured from the General Education Board over a quarter-million dollars in very recent years, including a present grant of $125,000 for the establishment of the graduate department at Chapel Hill.

It was learned that the GEB grant will be used to supplement the salaries above the state scale during the next five years for members of this department.

Rapid Development

"Utilization of statistics as interpreted by higher mathematics has increased in an almost revolutionary way in a very recent period," Dr. Graham stated. "The demand for Mathematical Statistics has been especially imperative in the fields of agriculture, industry, commerce, and government."

The President said that in the war just closed, experiments in Mathematical Statistics saved many millions of dollars and many thousands of lives. By the end of five years this new All-University undertaking will largely pay its own way out of projects allocated to it by the Department of Agriculture, the Army, Navy, Industry, and the Sciences, he added.

Hotelling Noted

Professor Harold Hotelling, acknowledged to be a brilliant and internationally eminent leader in the theory of mathematical statistics, now at Columbia University, will be head of the graduate department at Chapel Hill.

Smith Outlines New Phi Policies

Urging that the Phi Assembly plunge into full participation of campus activities, speaker A. B. Smith sought to put new life into the organization in his inaugural address Tuesday night. In advocating a four-point program, the new speaker called for the Phi to become "an organization which would mean something to the campus and one that does something outside these halls."

Outlining an entirely new program for the Phi, the speaker set forth these four major points:

1. The Phi should be an organization that will be heard from when a major issue arises.
2. The Phi should endeavor to see that the campus has an outstanding program of classical music consisting of a series of concert and symphonic programs.

3. Necessary action should be taken by the Phi with regard to the reopening of the Scuttlebutt in the lower quadrangle.
4. The Phi should instigate an investigation of the student fee financial structure.

"The Phi should be different," said Smith, "from the Di, the CPU, the IRC, and other campus organizations. In a few weeks the campus constitution will be coming up. This assembly should in every way possible attempt to debate the issues contained in the document and make it truly representative of the student body. The most constructive constitution possible should be offered to the student legislature."

The Phi Assembly discussed two conservative measures, and went on record as approving the Case Anti-Strike bill currently before Congress. Introduced by Roy Thompson, the second bill opposed the entrance of Negroes into the University. The latter was tabled indefinitely.
