Historian's Task Will Be Elementary Declares Professor

By Hoke Norris

For thirty years Dr. J. G. deR. Hamilton has been collecting documents which shed light on the South's poorly illuminated past, but he isn't particularly worried about the present. He thinks that will take care of itself.

"The present system of keeping files of periodicals and business and other records," said Dr. Hamilton, director of the University's famous southern historical collection, "will make the future historian's job easy as compared with ours."

Cloudy History

"Whereas the South's history is cloudy in many spots because of the absence of documentary material, everywhere now newspapers, magazines, government proceedings, business transactions — everything connected with our present life is recorded with such a completeness that the historian of the future may well suffer from the abundance of available material. His problem will be quite the opposite from ours, because we have had to dig for what we've got about our past."

One Weakness

There will, however, be one weakness in the records of the present, he said, explaining, "the modern letter is practically worthless, whereas the very articulate correspondence of the 19th century offers a wealth of material to the historian. Today, communication is too easy — don't write, telegraph, you are told. If you don't telegraph, you phone, or go to see your relatives and friends, and if you're forced to, you write a letter, which is a very poor product when compared with the full records provided by the correspondence of our ancestors."

"And war-time letters from service people—they're worthless to anyone who's interested

Hear Bing Crosby's NEW Album "Bell's of St. Mary's" at Ab's Bookshop

Robert Walker and June Allyson, who scored together in "Her Highness and the Bellboy," are reunited on the Carolina screen in "The Sailor Takes a Wife," a story of young love in a New York brownstone flat. Hume Cronyn, Audrey Totter, Eddie "Rochester" Anderson and Reginald Owen are others in the cast.

in what soldiers and sailors are doing. The censor gets what the future historian would like to have, and the result is a note which satisfies nobody.

"There were no censors during the Civil War. The G. Is of that day could write home about anything they wanted to, and many of them wrote home about everything—troop movements, coming engagements, morale, status of equipment, things which would put the modern soldier in the guard house in short order. As a result we have here in our collection a very good picture of what the soldier of the 1860's was like and what he thought and did during those trying years. You won't get any such picture from the personal letters of the modern soldier."

Historical Collection

The Southern Historical Collection was formally established by the Trustees of the University of North Carolina in 1930, but it is based on work which began in 1833 with the chartering of the North Carolina Historical Society. War, reconstruction and poverty interfered, but the project continued in a small way until the mid-twenties.

Since then, Dr. Hamilton, who has directed the collection since its establishment, has traveled half a million miles throughout the nation in his "search for the past." He now has 1,862 collections (or groups of papers), ranging in size from one document to 100,000, and he estimated the total number of individual manuscripts as 2,000,000. Now, as a vast collection of source material relative to the 14 old slave states of 1860, it is an invaluable and in fact well nigh necessary aid to the investigator of Southern history.

Third Edition

There has been such a demand for "Trees of the Southeastern States" by Dr. W. C. Coker and Dr. H. R. Totten of the University Botany Department, that the University Press has just brought out the third edition.

resulted in national anarchism. So long as any single nation remains unbowed before, and independent of, such an international authority, no nation, indeed no combination of nations, is immune to atomic obliteration. The introduction of atomic weapons into modern warfare has given the tiniest, poorest country an equal advantage with the largest and most resourceful.

How can the end of world government be attained? Some contend that the United States, being the only nation in the world which is at present in possession of atomic bombs sufficient to effect such a purpose, could probably bring the rest of the world to its feet and thereby establish an international authority. But that would not be world government; that would be a barbaric imposition of tyranny over, and not government of, by, and for the nations of the world. There is but one reasonable course which meets our perspective: to display to the rest of the world that we are ready, indeed anxious to give up those sovereign rights which, if given up by all, will form the nucleus for a world order sustained by international law. Such a step would incur the surrender of atomic control, in fact the control of all war-making implements. In short it would mean that each nation would sacrifice wholly and permanently its long-exploited power to make war at all.

There are those who consider such voluntary sacrifices fantastic, outside the realm of possibility. There is but one answer to them. The idea of the atomic bomb was also fantastic, but our generation has seen it become a vivid reality. It is a reality deserving of more than a casual consideration. For it precludes the possibility that man can go nonchalantly on his way, disregarding for his first and last time the fact that his selfish tendencies are being pampered at the cost of not merely millions of human lives, but civilization itself.

Music Heads Leave For Music Festival

Earl Slocum, Glen Haydon and Herbert Livingston, all of the music department, left yesterday for Athens, Ga., where they will take part in a musical festival this week-end.

Saturday morning they will present a program for clarinet, flute and piano, consisting of a Brahms sonata, a sonata by Hindemith, "Serenade for Flute and Clarinet" by Johnson, and "Tarentelle" by Saint-Saens. Sunday, Mr. Slocum will be featured as solo flutist with the Mini Chamber Orchestra in Charlotte. His presentation will be "B Minor Suite for Flute and Strings" by Bach.

campus government as it now stands. He admonished that WGA will not be destroyed under the proposed constitution but will be put in its respective place. "The time is now or never for liberal reform. Let us hope those who oppose amalgamation do not do so for sentiment."

Fear Competition

Thompson charged that coeds fearing amalgamation were indicating fear of competing with men on an equal basis. He told coeds they should have more faith in themselves and that they "should think twice before requesting a separate place to play."

Student Body President Charlie Vance drew loud applause with his reply to the charge of inefficiency in men's government as compared with that of the women. Said Vance, "We men have fought a war. There has been rapid turnover in our officers, something the women have not had to face. But watch us in the next few years, and I think we'll leave WGA far behind."
