Senate Passes New Draft Bill At Late Hour

Filibuster by Langer Almost Stops Passage

Washington, May 14 — The Senate has passed the House version of the draft bill with its amendments against the drafting of fathers and teen-agers. With the expiration of the draft act only a few hours away, the Senate, after hearing a filibuster by Senator Langer of North Dakota, rushed through the bill by a voice vote.

Secretary of War Patterson says the ban on teen-agers may force the army to keep "non-volunteers" in service six months longer than the present 18 months. And selective service adds that the bill will give them a draft pool of only 72,000 men to choose from.

Weaver Pays Court Costs For Contempt

Max Weaver, charged with contempt of court, paid $12.80 in court costs yesterday and apologized to the Recorder's Court and Judge H. A. Whitfield for his letter in the Daily Tar Heel. Although Editor Robert Morrison had been subpoenaed to the trial, he was charged with nothing by the court and was dismissed without a hearing.

E. C. Baskette of the University law school staff and several law students were at the trial in preparation to counsel in defense of the Daily Tar Heel; it was originally thought that the paper might be held responsible for Weaver's letter. The court room was packed with students, making the largest audience which the Chapel Hill Recorder's Court has had for some time.

In censuring Weaver for his letter, Judge Whitfield said, "I doubt if there is much difference in church and court. Court in this country is the greatest institution for the preservation of all under its jurisdiction. To attack the court is to strike at your own heart." Whitfield told Weaver that the apology was the best thing the defendant could have done.

Summer School To Offer Special Features; Registration Opened to Students Monday

A number of special features will be given during the Summer Session which will form the fourth complete quarter of the year's academic work at the University of North Carolina, according to the 1946 Summer Session catalogue just released here.

The Summer Session will run from June 13 through August 29, but will be divided into two terms so that those unable to attend throughout the entire session may get complete courses of six weeks' duration. The first term beginning June 13 will close on July 20 and the second term will begin July 22 and continue to the end of the Session.

Registration will be held on June 13 for the first term and on July 22 for the second term, with classes beginning the following day in both cases. Registration for credit will not be permitted after June 18 for the first term, nor after July 26 for the second term.

Students now enrolled in school may register during the week beginning next Monday, May 20. Those who register will not have to report until class time on June 14, thereby gaining one day of vacation time. Another advantage to early registration is a better chance to get courses and choice of hours.

General College students must make appointments with their advisors by signing appointment sheets that are to be kept at the information desk in South Building. Appointment sheets will be available Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Those who do not register during the week beginning May 20 may register on June 13 by paying a fee for late registration.

Among the special features are the English Institute, sponsored by the North Carolina English Teachers and the University Extension Division, See SUMMER SCHOOL, page 4.
