

Snavelly on Vandalism

Acts of vandalism cannot possibly help the team. The senseless defacing and destruction of property represent a needless loss to everybody. I am wholeheartedly in sympathy with every effort to end the series of depredations which have accompanied the Carolina-Duke games in the past, and I earnestly hope that our Carolina students will take the lead in refraining from such acts, regardless of what the provocation may be.

Carl G. Snavelly

So Far, So Good

Just one more day and the big event of the year will be upon us. The Carolina-Duke football classic, of far more importance this year than for the past several seasons, unfolds in Kenan stadium tomorrow.

With just one day left, the student reaction in refraining from any vandalous acts has been excellent. For the first time the entire student body has shown its intelligence and understanding by staying away from the neighboring campus and committing childish acts that disgrace them and their school. Similar intelligence has been shown by the Duke students.

The desire to enter tomorrow's game with no black place on either side and the desire to let all the battling take place on the gridiron is an outstanding example of the fine, clean sportsmanship for which all sports should stand.

At a time when many other schools throughout the nation are being plagued by vandalism, our hats are off to our students who have given everyone connected with Carolina something in which to take pride.

We have one more night left. It is our sincere desire that no one let his enthusiasms run away with him and carry him over to Durham. Let the huge pep rally tonight serve at the outlet for all of your excess energy. If we can enter tomorrow's game with a clean slate behind us as far as vandalism is concerned, everyone from Coach Snavelly to "Uncle George" Washington will have a right to say the student body is growing in stature and maturity.

So let's stay away from Duke tonight fellows, and give our all in the stands tomorrow afternoon as we watch the Tar Heels vandalize the Blue Devils on the gridiron.

Why Not Walk?

Police chief Sloan has urged all students to leave their cars in garages, driveways, or side streets tomorrow afternoon.

Certainly, this is a legitimate and sensible request. Chapel Hill will have more people here this week-end than ever before in its history. Tomorrow will be the key day of the whole week-end and approximately 45,000 people will be massed in and about the Hill.

Parking facilities here for football games are already admittedly inadequate. Tomorrow's record-breaking crowd will be accompanied by the presence of a record-breaking number of automobiles. State police officials have already made plans and announcements about handling traffic on the state highways. Here in Chapel Hill, the police will have their hands full taking care of the traffic.

Therefore, why not walk to the game if you live on the campus. Leave your car home. The exercise will do you good and it will save you no end of trouble and possible damage to your car. No one needs write about the complexities of football traffic. It is senseless to get wrapped up in it when there is no need for it.

Save wear and tear on your car and on yourself. Walk to the game in safety. Walk back flushed with the spirit of victory. You will be helping yourself and everyone else.

A Clean Slate

It has been called to our attention by many observant members of the student body that Rameses needs a bath.

Funny as the preceding sentence may sound at first glance, when one stops to consider the facts, it's true enough that our ram's cleanliness seems to have been sadly neglected. Perhaps that slate grey color is his own, but it looks suspiciously as if a little soap and water would make a big difference.

Tomorrow Carolina's footballers are set to whip Duke in the game of the year. Should our ram remain dirty in victory? It has been six years since we last beat Duke, and Rameses looks as though he has remained bathless for a like period of time.

Let's get some action, or some soap and water, at any rate. Let's have a clean slate tomorrow—a Carolina victory and a clean ram.

Over 400 New Pledges Listed At Close of Rushing Season

(Ed. note—We regret using this space to print the names of the fraternity pledges, but the list is of such great length that, of necessity, half of this page must be used to publish them.)

Fraternity rushing was successfully terminated last Wednesday, when over four hundred new men went by Memorial Hall to formally pledge fraternities. On the basis of these pledges, and others made since then in the office of the Dean of Men, the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity pledged 42 men—the high number for this rush period. Pi Kappa Alpha and Sigma Nu were next with 35 and 30 men, respectively.

The complete list of the new pledges is as follows:

What Do YOU Say?

By Sam Daniels

Today's question

What do you think will be the score in the Duke game and how will some of our many touchdowns be made?

The Answers

Justice will break through for one of his specials, and another one will come by a pass. Cox will make both extra-points. The final score will be 14-7 Carolina.—Ed Faulkner, Greensboro.

My guess is 21-13 in favor of Carolina naturally. I think Justice will score twice and Pupa will pass to Weiner for the third TD. Cox will make all the extra-points in a game as important as this.—M. P. Ferris, Georgetown, S. C.

Here's a shot in the dark—Carolina 21-14. With Justice off on another one of his long jaunts, a pass for Pupa's line plunge, we can't miss.—Jim McCormick, Sanford.

28-13, Carolina's favor. Justice accounting for two TD's, one on a run and the other by a pass from Pupa. Pupa accounting for one on a line plunge and Billy Myers making the last one. Cox, of course, will make the conversions.—John Tull, Lenoke, Ark.

Carolina will walk all over Duke, by passing and spectacular razzle-dazzle play, because Duke's line is known to be so strong. The probably score, 28-14.—Anne Simpson, Danville, Va.

Carolina will beat Duke in fine style, with a difference of thirteen points. It will be a wonderful game.—Arnetta Joyner, Rocky Mount.

Carolina will win over Duke 13-6. It will be the best football game ever.—Justice will make the first touchdown in the first quarter and Pupa will pass for one in the last quarter.—Jane Frye, Little Rock, Ark.

Women's Dean Explains Coed Later Permission

Coeds are warned that they do not have 2 o'clock permission tonight unless they attend the Tommy Dorsey dance. Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael and the Interdormitory council have issued a joint regulation requiring coeds to sign out for this special late dance permission.

Keeping Tabs

... with Randy
 In line with the Tabs policy of performing public service for its readers, I'm gonna give ya a chance to be devastatingly witty over this weekend. Surprise your import! Make yourself popular with the coeds. Be the life of the numerous parties betwixt now and Monday. Here's some dirty old jokes to help you along; believe you'll need 'em come Sunday afternoon.

1. The girl who does everything under the sun, has shadows under her eyes.

2. He: "I'm thirsty, and I need a drink."

She: "Drink milk, it's good for the blood."

He: "I ain't bloodthirsty."

3. If you're caught in hot water over the weekend—be nonchalant, take a bath.

4. And then there's the one about the little red corpuscles who all went to church in a body.

5. Geology prof: "Now can you tell whether this river is of old or recent formation?"

Student: "That's easy, this is a young river—you can see that the bed is still wet."

6. Gypsy Rose Lee may not understand parliamentary law but she certainly can put a motion before the house.

7. House Party Rules for the Dook Weekend:

a) No likker of any kind will be allowed in fraternity houses.

b) Bottles will be thrown from upper story windows, only.

8. The stork is charged with a lot of things that could more properly be blamed on a lark.

9. The dignified old lady stopped, addressed a little boy playing with a dog's tail, saying: "You shouldn't have cut off that dog's tail it'll rain his carriage."

"I don't know about his carriage, but it sure played hell with his waggin'."

10. Many a heaving bosom is nothing more than a hope chest.

The Average American College Girl

The Average American College Girl is more than anyone could ask for. She's the little girl you used to tease and laugh at. The one you shied away from at dancing. You were ashamed to be seen talking to her, let alone hold her hand. And then something happened. Those sharp angles turned to curves—the kind you have to slow down on. And that stringy hair suddenly smoothed out and softened up. Even the same old eyes seemed to have changed. And now she's at college. She's at Skidmore, Smith, Vassar, Wellesley and all the rest, but she's the same girl. The girl who makes a sweater and saddle shoes as glamorous as a sequin gown. She's at home in the Stork Club, or Harry's. She laughs at your corny jokes and tries to work up a blush at the raw ones. When she's with you, she's your girl, and when she's with somebody else—well, she's with somebody else. She likes to dance, and she likes to sit them out too. She can be gay or sad, and she has a dress for every mood. She likes the average American college boy, the average American houseparty, the average American football game, and brother can she spend your average American dollar!
