Red Cross Goal Is Set At $6,500

Chapel Hill must raise $6,500 to meet its quota in the Red Cross Fund Drive, Rear Admiral Donald Loomis, chairman for the local chapter, said yesterday.

In compliance with the wishes of the Student Legislature, the Red Cross is conducting no solicitations of funds from University students. Any student who wishes to give money to the organization, however, may do so in the Red Cross office in Alumni Building or at the Fund Drive headquarters at Strowd Motor Company.

"In addition to performing services to the needy families of Orange County, the local Red Cross chapter has worked consistently with students, particularly veterans, in helping to solve their financial and personal problems," Admiral Loomis said.

Red Cross Grey Ladies visit the infirmary regularly with books and magazines for the use of students there. Red Cross also carries on the National Blood Program through regional blood centers.

-Hit Songs-

He cautions, however, against assuming that a desire to escape is the only reason for the vast popularity of catchy songs.

Among other motives he cites the longing for prestige, to keep up with the crowd, "to belong." Popular songs are a good way to fulfill this longing since they have what a sociologist might call "cultural approval." The individual says to himself, perhaps unconsciously: "Everybody's doing it, so it must be all right. I'll just go along with the crowd."

A need to relax, not quite the same as the desire to escape from reality, also is behind song fashions, according to Johnson.

"Even older people can't think seriously over a long period of time," he says. As an example he mentions the way a speaker on a serious topic will brighten his lecture with anecdotes.

Keeping up with the latest tunes, Johnson explains, also is partly due to a desire most people have for new experiences and ideas.

George Washington Students, Guests View Russian Films

WASHINGTON, March 22-(AP)—Approximately 90 George Washington University students and their guests spent two hours one evening last week in the normally secretive Russian Embassy, most of it viewing Soviet newsreels.

The visit was made last Thursday, but did not become generally known until today.

It came about this way: A foreign affairs fraternity, Delta Phi Epsilon, asked the Embassy to send a speaker to give a talk. The Embassy responded with an invitation for the group to come to the Embassy for the evening.

The students and two faculty members accepted the invitation. They were shown Russian propaganda films showing entrance of the Chinese Communist army into Shanghai, motorcycle races near Leningrad and a long one portraying the World Youth Festival held in Budapest last August.

At the end of the newsreel showing, the students said, six or eight lesser embassy officials accompanied them back to the university campus for a more relaxed get-together.

Robert Bodden, one of the students in the group, told a reporter that "when we left the embassy I noticed a marked willingness to talk more freely—they seemed to let loose a whole lot more then."

He characterized the newsreels as "just the ordinary propaganda one would get from Soviet people—the party line on the democratic way of their state."
