Scott To Pull Third Surprise At Gardner Banquet Tonight?

By Don Maynard
Guests attending the third annual Oliver Max Gardner award banquet to be held in Raleigh tonight will probably be wondering more about just what Governor Kerr Scott will surprise them with than they will be over who will be the recipient of the award.

In the past two years, the Governor has just come up with the appointment of a new junior senator from North Carolina and a new president for the Consolidated University. Speculation has arisen now and the question being asked: "What next?" The Gardner Award is an annual affair, set up by the late

Governor, and presented to the University faculty member who has made the "greatest contribution to the welfare of the human race during the past academic year." At the first award banquet, held here in 1949, Miss Louise Brevard Alexander, for 16 years teacher of government and political science at Woman's College, was honored.

But the award was overshadowed with the announcement by Governor Scott that University President Frank Porter Graham had been named North Carolina's junior senator to succeed the late Senator J. Melville Broughton.

Last year, at ceremonies held on the campus at W.C., Dr. Robert Ervin Coker, retired Kenan Professor Emeritus of Zoology here and director of the University Institute for Fisheries Research and Development at Morehead City, was named the recipient.

And again, circumstances stepped in to rob a Gardner Award winner of the limelight; Gordon Gray made his first public, official appearance as President-elect of the Consolidated University.

The Gardner Award banquet will mark the 20th Anniversary of the consolidation of the University.

A committee made up of the University's Trustees has received recommendations from the three branch institutions for winner of the award this year. And they have decided upon a worthy candidate. But no one will know until tomorrow night who it is, although many have guessed it will be a member of the N. C. State College faculty, completing the three-year circuit by naming a member of each faculty as winner.

Saltonstall To Speak On World Problems

Publications Board Reinstates Parker

Financiers Void Recent Special Action In Electing Chairman Zane Robbins

The Publications Board yesterday reinstated Roy Parker, Jr., as editor of The Daily Tar Heel and voided the action it took March 12 when it named its chairman, Zane Robbins, to become interim editor. Parker was elected to the job in the fall quarter.

The latest switch in editors will become effective with tomorrow morning's edition.

Parker, who resigned the editor's job when he made plans not to return to school this quarter, reversed his decision and enrolled for the spring. He wrote the Board yesterday, "Realizing that I have put you in a very awkward position, I am asking you to void your action of Monday, March 12, in naming a new editor of The Daily Tar Heel."

The motion to reinstate Parker was passed unanimously. Only the Legislature member to the Board, Bill Skinner, was not present at the meeting.

The group also gave Interim Editor Robbins a vote of thanks for filling in as editor "and for cooperation during a very trying period." Secretary Frank Allston reported.

Robbins, who completes his term of office with today's paper, claims the shortest term of office of any Daily Tar Heel editor ever to serve in that capacity.

He said he had set as a goal individual talks with "at least 1,000 students if time permits" between now and election day, April 12. "In a fair, straightforward campaign, I intend to ask the student body to simply look at the record," he added.

Maynard, who is present associate editor of the newspaper, said in a prepared statement, "The Daily Tar Heel should not only present the views of students through its editorial page columns and letters to the editor, but should contain what the students want to read in its news columns and editorial page."

Maynard is a veteran of three years experience on the staff of the campus daily, and was appointed associate editor under Editor Roy Parker, Jr., last fall.
