

Ballet Theatre Plans Performance At Duke

Jean Babilee and Nathalie Philippart, French ballet stars making their first American appearance with Ballet Theatre, will dance their most famous roles when the company appears in Duke University's Page Auditorium on October 11.

Brought to Durham as a special attraction by the Duke All-Star Concert Series, Ballet Theatre's company of 100 will perform a four-ballet program. Tickets are still available, according to Manager J. Foster Barnes.

Information and reservations may be secured by writing Mr. Barnes, Box 4822, Duke Station, Durham, N. C. Tickets are on sale in Room 201, West Campus Union Building.

Babilee and Philippart, who danced the roles they created for "La Jeune Homme et la Mort," at its American debut at the Metropolitan Opera House last spring, will appear in the Page Auditorium performance of this ballet. Set to the music of Johann Sebastian Bach, the ballet was written by Jean Cocteau and choreographed by Roland Petit.

Stars Alicia Alonso, Igor Youskevitch, John Kriza, and Mary Ann Moylan will dance leading parts in "Black Swan," "Constantia," and "Rodeo."

Youskevitch, generally considered to be the world's finest male classical dancer, will perform in the "Black Swan," Pas de Deux from "Swan Lake". Frederic Chopin's F Minor Concerto provides the background for the "Constantia" ballet.

Agnes de Mille's most popular ballet, "Rodeo" should be high spot of the evening for those who prefer modern American dance.

By O. Mac White

A lot of characters of various description hang out at Graham Memorial.

This year there is a new one who will be sticking pretty close to the place.

It's William Stanley Roth—better known as Bill—who has replaced Jim Rathburn as Director of the student union building.

Bill, who hails from Oteen of which he says Asheville is a suburb, came to Carolina in '48 from Asheville-Biltmore College to get a degree in business administration. At present he is plugging for a masters in industrial relations.

Bill claims to have never had any designs on his new job until one afternoon a group of people porporting themselves to be the GM directors cornered him on Franklin St. and started negotiations.

He admits the director of GM has to be prepared for anything. "Things were pretty dull for the first couple of weeks," he said, "but one day the machinery in the girls' lounge started acting up. I had to pull out a couple of pairs of boots from my closet so that the coeds could brave the resulting flood and utilize the facilities."

He is a member of the Golden Fleece, Order of the Grail, the National Executive Board of Alpha Phi Omega, service fraternity, and a former secretary of the Interdormitory Council.

Playmakers Will Give 5 Major Productions

Five major productions will be presented by the Carolina Playmakers during the coming season, John W. Parker, business manager, announced here yesterday.

Opening the season on October 23-28 will be "The Silver Whistle," a wistful three-act comedy by Robert E. McEnroe. This play, which had a long and successful run on Broadway during the 1948-49 season, tells of the happiness brought into the lives of old folks by a wandering tramp. The Playmaker production will be staged by Harry Davis.

Sidney Kingsley's "Darkness at Noon," a psychological study of a former Russian party leader, will follow on November 27-December 2. Adapted from the novel by Arthur Kostler, the play is a current Broadway success. The production will be directed by Karl Jurgensen.

Third in the series is "Spring for Sure," a musical folk play presented by the Playmakers with great acclaim two seasons ago. It is authored by Catherine McDonald, a resident of Chapel Hill, and Wilton Mason, an instructor in musical composition here. Following its performances here on February 1-3, it will travel on two separate tours of the southern states.

"Winterset," by Maxwell Anderson, which will follow on February 26-March 2, is one of the rare modern poetic tragedies and received the highly prized New York Drama Critics Circle Award in 1936. Samuel Selden, chairman of the department of dramatic art and director of "The Lost Colony" at Manteo and "Forever This Land" at New Salem State Park, Illinois, both outdoor historical dramas, will personally direct the play.

Final play of the season will be Shakespeare's "The Tempest." This sprightly romantic drama will be shown outdoors in the Forest Theatre on May 16-18. Foster Fitz-Simmons will be director.

Season tickets for the plays will go on sale Tuesday, October 2, in Parker's offices in Swain Hall and at Ledbetter-Pickard's on West Franklin St. Only 1,000 of these tickets, which permit the holder to see five major productions for the established price of four, will be issued.

UNC Photos Are In Life

A large group of people got up before daybreak at Chapel Hill to witness the spectacle, and a photo of one group of students shows them watching through filters which were issued by the Morehead Planetarium.

Other pictures showed students observing through a telescope, and a student on the hill near Gimghoul Castle which afforded a fine view of the eclipse.

Also shown in Life are photographs taken at Greensboro showing, in color, the eclipse at the point where the sun looked like a new moon and at the maximum of the eclipse when the moon's image was centered over the sun's face.

Photographers were Jim Womack of the Greensboro Daily News and Robert Kelley of Life's staff.

Among the many onlookers at the University were delegates attending the annual convention of the National Astronomical League, many of whom took photographs. It was estimated that several hundred pictures were taken that morning.
