

Phi Gams Find A Solution To Critical Water Shortage

By Walt Dear

A clump of grass can cause confusion, especially when it covers up something.

One clump of grass located on the front lawn of the Phi Gamma Delta House almost caused a serious injury to one of the brothers and created much speculation on an old well.

Seems as though one of the members, Charlie Sawyer of Windsor, was involved in a crucial play in a tag football game when his foot gave way on some soft soil. Sawyer almost fell down a 12 foot hole but managed to grab on to something before he fell in.

The hole is the last bit of evidence that the Phi Gams used to get their drinking water via the old-fashioned way. Members think the well, which had been covered by a rusty old piece of iron, was built 70 years ago. The Weedon home, the old Phi Gam house was torn down in 1929 to make way for the present one, used to extend out to the sidewalk. The well is about three yards from the front walk.

Although members haven't decided on what to do with the hole—whether to fill it up with dirt or make a miniature Old Well out of it—no action will be taken until more information about it can be found. Jim Maynard, another Phi Gam, indicated that there still might be water from an underground spring.

There was no indication as to whether the fraternity would send the water, if they did find some, to Raleigh to relieve the crucial shortage in that city.

As for the recess in the front yard, it'll go down in chapter history as Sawyer's Hole.

TV NEWSREEL

by W. J. Ogburn, Jr.

A lot of you will be glad to know that the top men in Television are not now satisfied merely to borrow talent and ideas from radio and the movies. They're experimenting to find entertainment and features which will belong only to television . . . which will give YOU the viewer the best possible fare.

Top network executives are on the march . . . poking in far corners for new ideas, new writers, new actors, because they know that people want something different for a change. It's a new era and although the old tried and true stars will be seen as often as the public demands it there are going to be some changes. That, you can count on.

In the next year . . . you'll be getting in on the groundwork of some exciting experiments in new shows. You'll have a hand in building the stars and voicing your opinions as to what you like. It's the public that counts where entertainment is concerned. So . . . voice your opinions as often as you can.

Don't forget to tune in tonight to see Rosalind Russell starred in the Playhouse of Stars program at 9 o'clock. It's the first time in television history that we will see a preview of a moving picture before it has been released to the movie theatres. Usually it is the other way around.

More and more folks are voicing their preference for PHILCO television. And it's no wonder. Philco is known for quality the world over. And you'll find your favorite model and screen size on display in our showroom. Come on in and take your pick. We guarantee service and installation at OGBURN FURNITURE CO., 312 W. Franklin St., Phone 5841.

money but with the stipulation that it would change in size.

The Daily Tar Heel is now on a six day week publication schedule, in tabloid form. The new measure would provide for six issues per week for the rest of the fall quarter, but would necessitate a cut to a five day week the remaining quarters, McIntyre said.

The committee consulted with Frank Allston, Publications Board chairman, who agreed with their stipulation. McIntyre talked with Editor Glenn Harden who said "it would take $12,000 to put out a six-day a week standard-sized newspaper."

Publications Board member Walt Dear, when asked about the appropriations, said, "This measure seems completely feasible to me. With the additional funds I think the paper might go back to the regular size by next January or sooner." Dear pointed out that he was not speaking for the Board but only on personal opinion.

Dear added that student opinion seemed to warrant the change.
