Dentists Report Fund Goal Figure In Sight Of Victory

Dentists of North Carolina celebrated "Victory Day" yesterday in Chapel Hill as the immediate goal of $100,000 was reported in sight.

In the short space of a one-month-old fund-raising campaign being carried on by the North Carolina Dental Foundation, Inc., it was revealed at the annual meeting of the Foundation here that more than $95,000 had been raised in contributions and pledges.

Primary purpose of the Foundation is "to aid the educational and research program of the School of Dentistry, and, thereby the dental and general health of the people of the State."

Sessions held in Gerrard were presided over by Dr. Paul E. Jones, Farmville, vice-president of the Foundation, who took the place of President H. O. Lineberger, Raleigh, absent because of illness.

Dr. Amos Bumgardner, Charlotte, chairman of the development committee and campaign organizer, said "the dentists of North Carolina have a winning team. This is the first time they have had an opportunity to stand up and work towards a goal. You men are giving the state an opportunity to further the dental profession, not only in North Carolina, but in the South." He said the dentists of North Carolina now consider themselves alumni of the School here and that they are a definite part of its development.

Chancellor Robert B. House, who greeted the dentists, praised the work of Dr. Jones, who, as State Senator, "went to bat for the State and the region. We here are grateful that the University was your unanimous choice for the location of the state's dental school and we are happy to be a part of this undertaking."

Dean John C. Brauer of the Dental School, as secretary-treasurer of the Foundation, presented the financial statement of the organization and reported on the organizational meeting last November and on meetings of the executive committee and board of directors since then.

"The dentists of North Carolina," he said, "felt that they should be allowed to have the first opportunity to advance dentistry in this State, so they, themselves, have put on this campaign and raised this amount of money for the Foundation. In the short space of one month, it is remarkable what they have done without help, financial or otherwise. They have given their time and dug into their own pockets for operating expenses."

Vice-President Jones said "this is the finest group of workers a man ever faced. All of us want this program to continue from year to year." He read a message from President Lineberger, who congratulated the dentists on the progress made and cited the need for aid in establishing dental schools not only here, but throughout the country.

Famed Author-Illustrator Prince Ends Life At Home Here Yesterday

WILLIAM MEADE PRINCE, world reknown author and illustrator who killed himself at his home here yesterday morning.

William Meade Prince ended his life here yesterday morning in the place he had helped to immortalize as "The Southern Part of Heaven."

The greying 58-year-old world renown illustrator and author fired a bullet from a .32 caliber automatic into his temple shortly after 11 o'clock yesterday morning, according to the verdict of Orange County Coroner Allen H. Walker. Death came instantaneously.

His wife, Mrs. Lillian Prince, who had been ill and confined to her bed for the past several days, was rushed to Duke Hospital in state of seve shock. She was reported to be in condition of shock there last night.

Mrs. Prince was in her upstairs room of their expensive Greenwood home when her husband took his life in his studio, a removed wing of the beautiful two-story colonial brick residence.

No Winning Mood Shown Again At Va.

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 10—It looked like a repeat performance of last year's 44-13 defeat at the hands of the Cavaliers as the Tar Heels couldn't get in the winning mood today.

The team seemed to lack the necessary punch to win, while the fans and even the cheerleaders gave up after the first quarter.

The balmy weather and two Carolina scores were about the only thing that cheered up students. The first UNC score, coming in the third quarter, was followed by an announcement of the Duke-Wake Forest game with the score in the Deacons' favor, 19-0. For once there were two outbursts of yells, one for the touchdown and one for Wake Forest.

Funeral arrangements for Prince were incomplete last night.

The famed artist telephoned a local physician, Dr. Fred G. Patterson, at about 11 o'clock yesterday morning and asked him to "come right away; there's an emergency." Arriving at Prince's residence a few minutes later, the doctor found two penned notes attached to the front door.

"I've shot myself in the studio," the first said. "There's nothing else you can do for me. Please see about Lillian."

The other, a detailed full-page message, related to the disposing of his business affairs.

In this he wrote of having been despondent for some time, saying at one point, "The end is inevitable . . . I am sorry to cause all this trouble."

Close friends of the family and neighbors in the comfortable east side residential district said, however, that Prince had appeared to be quite cordial and happy in the last few days.

Prince apparently spread a light green turkish towel on the floor of his spacious studio and sat down before firing the fatal bullet.

Alongside him were the easel and palette of paints that brought him fame and from which he had originated innumerable covers for the leading magazines of the country. His plastic-rimmed spectacles and a hammer, with which he had apparently been doing some carpentry work, lay upon an adjacent stool. An old-time pistol in a holster and cartridge belt hung in its time-worn place on the back of his easel.

He was dressed in his familiar habit of tweed trousers, a knit maroon sport shirt under a grey sleeveless sweater and a light brown button-down sweater.

His right hand still clutched tightly the trigger of the .22 caliber automatic when his body was found.

William Meade Prince was born in Roanoke, Virginia, on July 8, 1893 and moved to Chapel Hill when he was five years old. Here he lived on East Rosemary Street with his mother and grandfather, the Rev. William Meade, then rector of the Cross Episcopal church.

His family moved to Birmingham when Prince was 15 years old. There he worked as a railroad clerk, and having always possessed a talent for drawing, the youth soon saved enough money to enter the New York School of Fine and Applied Arts. Here

Lenoir Band Subs For University

Charlottesville, Nov. 10—The Lenoir High School band from Lenoir, N. C., marched and played at the Carolina-Virginia football game today in Scott Stadium here.

Their performance was in accordance with a long tradition dating back to 1927, since in most cases when the game was played here they substituted for the UNC band.

Norwegian Student Builds Morale In War

AGNAR MYKLE, Norwegian student here, is shown with two well known personalities in puppet form. Mykle hopes to produce a political comedy with these and other puppets of world leaders for students at Chapel Hill. He, with his wife, founded the first Norwegian puppet theatre.

Wars often produce good things

The case of Agnar Mykle, 36-year-old Norwegian student here bears this out. He is a dramatic art student here on Fulbright and Smith-Mundt scholarships.

After the Nazis had occupied Norway during World War II and the fighting was over, there came a long period of waiting—just waiting. It was during this period in the earlier part of the war, when the underground resistance movement was not very successful in its attempts to undermine the Germans, that Agnar got interested in puppets.

Although he majored in commerce in the Norwegian School of Economic and Political Sciences in Bergen and was a professional writer after graduation, Agnar, in company with his wife, attended the Academy of "les Compagnons de la Marionnette" at Paris in 1947 to learn more about puppetry. He went there as the French government's grantee.

The husband-and-wife team took top honors in academic ratings at the school and later started the first Norwegian Puppet Theatre, which she is now operating while he holds his scholarships.

Last summer the Mykles toured
