Five Enemy Planes Shot Down Yesterday

SEOUL—American fighter pilots shot down five Communist MIG-15 jet fighters over North Korea yesterday, raising to more than 500 the toll of the Russian-made planes destroyed in the 29-month old Korean war. The aerial duels between the Sabres and MIG's took place as F-84 Thunderjets smashed the "hottest target" in North Korea—a huge enemy troop concentration area and suspected rocket launching site near the Yalu River.

Humanities Practical As Science

Religion, literature, music, arts and the other humanities are "just as practical as the sciences" in the development of a well-balanced education and a well-ordered life.

This view was stressed here Thursday by Chancellor Robert B. House who delivered the fall quarter lecture in the humanities at the University.

Addressing an audience of faculty, students and townspeople in Gerrard Hall, he summed up the theme of this series of lectures—on the value of the arts to an educated person—which was inaugurated in 1944.

He was presented by Dr. Dougald MacMillan, chairman of the English Department.

Chancellor House stressed the view that a proper balance should be maintained between the humanities and the social and physical sciences.

Taking the position that America is the most practical nation in history, Chancellor House said this nation unhesitatingly applies the practical test to any field of value and that by any test "the humanities are utterly practical. "They are knowledge basic to all other knowledge; and, since knowledge is basic to action, they are basic to all thought and action. Moreover, the humanities are the arts of expression, execution, and communication.

"No sound work is possible without them. And, finally, recreation is as practical as work; and the humanities are the greatest known recreational resources. No sound play is possible without them."

Chancellor House's subject was "The Educational Function of the Humanities." He took his text from a line by Alfred North Whitehead, the great modern philosopher, who said: "Show youth where beauty dwells and there it will abide."

He also quoted a passage from the poet Keats who said: "Beauty is truth, truth, beauty—that is all ye know on earth, and all ye need to know."

Chancellor House said he was convinced that "more good teaching goes on in this University today than in my day because the spirit remains the same and the means have increased. It is wonderful to me to see art, music, drama, religion functioning today as departments," he declared.

An alert student today can "absorb a certain amount of culture here now that was not available 30 years ago," he said. "Real education is active, but I believe more good studying goes on now than formerly."
