

Society Hears Local Doctor

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Dec. 11—Dr. Ernest H. Wood of Chapel Hill, N. C. this week described the perfection of a new type of diagnostic X-ray tube.

Called the "fractional focus tube," the new development allows enlargements of X-ray pictures without loss of detail. Dr. Wood spoke before the Radiological Society of North America.

Large pictures are valuable, Dr. Wood said, because they often give information to the radiologist which cannot be learned from conventional films. In particular, bone diseases may be better examined by these enlargements. The new tube has not been thoroughly tested on other parts of the body.

The society's meeting ends Sunday.

Chancellor House Goes Back A Few Years

N. C. Progress Due To Looking 'Outward And Forward'—Johnson

Despite numerous handicaps due largely to bad government in its first century and a half, North Carolina has forged ahead to become one of the most progressive states.

It is because, as Gerald Johnson said recently, it has always "looked outward and forward instead of backward and inward."

That view was emphasized by Chancellor Robert B. House in an address before the Faculty Club at its meeting this week. He cited some of the highlights in the State's history.

In existence for approximately 150 years, North Carolina was ruled by the Lords Proprietors for the first 75 years and by the Royal Colony during the next 75. Chancellor House pointed out. Most of the governors during that period were shiftless, inefficient and dishonest, he said.

"But the State has never had a poor governor since the State became free as a result of the Revolutionary War," the Chancellor asserted. "Our governors since that time have been magnificent public servants, and our public institutions as a whole have been well run."

University graduates, he said, have played leading roles in the organization and functioning of most of our public and private institutions and other state agencies. It is a record in which University alumni can take great pride, he added.

The present day University is touching the lives, in one way or another, of 770,000 of its four million citizens, the Chancellor said.

Ascribing the State's early handicap largely to its political boundaries, Chancellor House said that in the early years North Carolina was looked down upon by Virginia and South Carolina and regarded by those two states as "lazy and unprogressive."

The State was also greatly handicapped, he said, because it had no important seaports or east-west trunk railways. The situation became so discouraging between 1800 and 1860 that one-third of the population moved to other states.

A great deal of the state's progress since the turn of the century must "be credited to the wisdom and foresight of our industrial leaders who have played a major role in giving us diversification and in developing the State. For the first time our farms are not being mortgaged to New York banks.

Our ancestors were not mostly rogues or shiftless people as some Virginians or South Carolinians will try to tell you—but they were a conservative people made up of English, Scots and Germans in about equal proportions. There was little immigration to this State after 1775."

Watch Cardinals

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 11—Enos Slaughter warned the National League to watch out for the Cardinals this summer after he had spiked rumors of his retirement at a press conference here today.

The venerable Card outfielder said he had no idea of quitting the game. "I've taken care of myself," he said. "My legs are good and I still have a lot of games left."

Phi Beta Prize Given Badger Prof

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 11—The Phi Beta Kappa Senate today announced that the 1952 Christian Gauss Prize of $1,000 has been awarded to Jerome Hamilton Buckley, English professor at Wisconsin. The prize is granted annually in recognition of the best book of the year published by an American university press in the field of literary scholarship or criticism. Buckley's book is "The Victorian Temper", by the Harvard Press.

The Maker of "High Noon" Tells a War Story about...

THE EIGHT-MAN ARMY OF WORLD WAR TWO

When Stanley Kramer wanted to make a movie about prizefighting, he made "The Champion"—one of the great movies.

When Stanley Kramer wanted to make a movie about The West, he made "High Noon"—one of the very great westerns.

When Stanley Kramer wanted to make a movie about prison life, he made "My Six Convicts," certainly the best of its type.

Now Stanley Kramer brings you EIGHT IRON MEN—his kind of soldier story.

EIGHT IRON MEN gives you the story of all G.I.s—the humor and heroics, the horseplay and the unheralded gallantry. Yes, here's war with a brand new twist—and wait till you meet her!

And wait till you meet the eight great and gutsy guys who dated her in their dreams... Sergeant Mooney, who could always spare a couple of stripes to save a buddy... Collucci, with his tall tales of the big girls that didn't get away... Coke, the hot-head, and Sapiros, the clown... Small, the little man who wasn't all there... Carter, who'd bat 1,000 in any man's league... Ferguson, too lazy to dream his own dreams... and Muller, whose sister kept them all in fruitcake—and cheesecake.

There's not one phoney foot of film in this whole magnificent story. EIGHT IRON MEN is all true. It's all tremendous. And it's all tremendously exciting!
