Student Shoots Self Here

were a number of Mason's personal belongings—a little money, social security cards, a birth certificate which showed he was 17 on Jan. 1, three large pocket knives, his portable typewriter and radio, and an open box of hollow-point .22 shells with one cartridge missing. Also on the table was a stack of free-hand pencil drawings of various makes of pistols and rifles. Beside these was a pile of magazines, catalogues and booklets about firearms. On top of the pile was a new BB pistol in a box. Mason's roommate, James Thomas Kirby, second year pharmacy student at the University from Wilson, was not at the house at the time. Kirby said the last time he'd seen Mason was that morning when he left the room while he (Kirby) was still in bed. Kirby and other students in the house said Mason gave them no immediate reason to feel he'd want to take his life, although they felt he was unhappy with his family and financial situations. Patrolman Creel said his investigation showed the rifle had been purchased earlier in the day at a local store. It was the only regular firearm in the room and Kirby said he'd never seen it before. Mason was a weapons enthusiast, Kirby said, and like to talk to him about firearms. Other than these conversations he had little to say to any of them at the rooming house, according to Kirby, although he was not unfriendly. Among the youth's belongings the officers found three new boyonets and a receipt for them from a New York weapons firm. Charles Josey of Maiden and Julius Howard of Wilmington were the first into the room after hearing a shot "like a cap pistol, then a thud." They said they saw Mason slumped on the floor, his head wedged between the bed and a cabinet. The note, verified by the police as being in Mason's handwriting, was addressed "to whom it may concern." It made a brief reference to funeral arrangements and disposition of his few belongings and contained a statement that whatever people might think he was "taking the easy way out."

No funeral arrangements had been made as of yesterday.

Miss Ienke Kimmel Tops Cosmopolitan Club Slate

The Cosmopolitan Club elected Miss Ienke Kimmel of the Netherlands as its president for the second semester at a meeting last Sunday. Other officers elected are Bruce Mooney of Timberlake, vice president; Miss Clara Mae Barbour of Chapel Hill, secretary, and Vincent Encarnacion of the Philippines, treasurer. Last semester's president was Ram Desikan of India.

the Foreign Service of the Department of State as well as in other agencies which carry on activities abroad, such as the U. S. Information Administration and the Foreign Operations Administration including the Point Four program of technical assistance to underdeveloped countries.

The discussion Thursday night will be the first of two programs planned by Pi Sigma Alpha for the presentation of information about career opportunities in government and politics for persons with college and university training. In the second program, which will be during the spring semester, opportunities in politics and in the service of state and local governments will be analyzed.
