'THE MEDIUM:'

Tragic, Beautiful & Violent

By MARY ACKERMAN

Unforgettably tragic and violently beautiful, the film-opera "The Medium" held its audience in continual suspense and sympathy Thursday night in Carroll Hall.

The Graham Memorial Activities Board Film Committee sponsored this screen spectacle of Gian-Carlo Menotti's opera. Marie Powers starred as Madame Flora, the medium, with Leo Coleman as the mute idiot boy, Toby, and Anna Marie Alberghetti in her first film role as Monica, Madame Flora's daughter and Toby's sole friend and protector.

"The Medium," most skillfully and imaginatively produced, remains a real opera and a music-dramatic work in all of its original intensity. Menotti's theme, actors and mechanism formed a masterful unity of great and absorbing strength.

The music and acting are dynamically integrated, building the expressions of intense emotion, violent passion and tender affection that fill the production. The rich contrast of Madame Flora and the beautiful soprano of Monica blend and contrast in gentle affection and agonizing outcries of terror, fear, anger and hate. The mute Toby convinces his audience of his idiocy and of his capacity for genuine affection.

"The Medium" is the story of the moral tragedy of Madame Flora's psychological downfall. Known as the "Medium" herself, she is a convincing fraud—a pretended communicator with spirits of another world. After "helping" a couple communicate with the spirit of their deceased daughter, her conscience begins to plague her.

The joy and happiness on the parents' faces while they were supposedly hearing their daughter's voice and seeing her face during the communicating session, and the money they paid for the false apparition, constantly prey on her mind.

Even more, however, the fact that Madame Flora herself felt something touch her shoulder during her affected trance, drives her slowly insane. She suspects mute Toby of this action but can never obtain proof. Finally she escapes the knowing of her conscience and suspicions in drinking, illusions and mad ravings. The final scene of the tragedy, Toby has sneaking across the stage behind a curtain, Madame Flora from stupor. She is quite bursting forth with the cry of "Who is there? don't you answer?"

Mute Toby remains shivering in terror.
