

Planetarium Now Getting Ready For Presentation Of Yule Show

Christmas, in all the splendor that ancient Biblical accounts give it, will arrive Nov. 20 at the University.

The hands of time will be turned back some 2,000 years when Morehead Planetarium begins its seventh year running of the "Star of Bethlehem."

The now-famed presentation, which has drawn 120,000 men, women and children since its opening in 1949, will continue this year from Nov. 20 to Dec. 31.

"I'm expecting more people this year than we've had for any other presentation," said Planetarium Manager A. F. Jenzano.

And he's already making plans for them. Technicians have been erecting "behind the dome" scenes since October 29, and are expected to total 1,000 hours' work before the first production.

"They're giving every bit of their time to erecting scenes for the Christmas show, except for time needed to present the current program," said Jenzano.

Meanwhile, artists, recording technicians and other contributors to the massive, and expensive, production are at work. Everything figured, it's a $5,000 production.

The schedule of presentations has been advanced about a week this year. That move, said the planetarium manager, was made to accommodate persons who attend the Carolina-Duke football game November 24.

"This pageant has gotten to the point where I don't believe we could get along without it," asserted Jenzano. "It's just been building up year after year."

He estimated that from 8,000 to 10,000 youngsters from North Carolina and points in South Carolina and Virginia will attend the 60-minute programs this year.

Jenzano declared that the presentation "is typical of our constant effort to keep science and religion in an area of mutual agreement."

"It has been acclaimed voluntarily by clergymen and laymen, scientists, people in all walks of life," he added. "It's for people of all ages, from six to 108."

Through the planetarium instrument, skies of Judea are recreated on the planetarium dome as astronomers say they appeared in the year 7 B.C. Five tableaux and other effects add splendor to the presentation.

As the "Star of Bethlehem" commences, a narrator gives "a scientific explanation of conditions and phenomena of the Biblical era," said Jenzano.

After the explanation comes the pageant, which begins at the Annunciation and follows the Christmas story through the Nativity. Composit projection of a cathedral interior on the planetarium dome fittingly climaxes the story.

As in former years, presentations this year will include splendid colors and technical know-how which has made the "Star of Bethlehem" the most popular planetarium production.

The realistic account of the world's most cherished season is taken from the King James version of the Bible and includes many quotes thereof. It is designed for general public appeal.

Following is a schedule announced today by Manager Jenzano:

Daily at 11 a.m. and 2 p.m., by reservation only, for school groups; public programs daily at 8:30 p.m.; and matinees on Saturday at 11 a.m., and 3 and 4 p.m., and on Sunday at 2, 3 and 4 p.m.

Jenzano said special presentations are offered at times other than those listed above for any group numbering 100 or more. Reservations should be made through the Morehead Planetarium, UNC, Chapel Hill.
