Bass Reviews Edit Policy; Sloan Notes Morale 'Crisis' Obligated To Seek Solution Says Sloan

Charlie Sloan said yesterday that he would, as Daily Tar Heel editor, "consider it an obligation to do everything possible to start things moving toward a solution of the problem . . . of morale at Carolina."

Responding to a statement made Tuesday by Daily Tar Heel editor candidate Frank Crowther on the lack of morale among students and faculty, Sloan said that he agreed with Crowther that "it is a crisis."

NEIL BASS seeks editorship

CHARLIE SLOAN candidate for editor

Bass Charges World News & Editor Policy

An overabundance of national and international news and an ivory-towered editorial policy are among the situations promised to be remedied by Neil Bass, independent candidate for editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

"Bring the paper back to the student," he said. "If there were any one slogan which would capture my sentiments, this would certainly be it. . . . My first week at Carolina began work on The Daily Tar Heel. I have worked continuously for two-and-a-half years since that time. I believe this experience will enable me to give you the type of newspaper a great university such as ours deserves. . . . Concerning my interest, if I did not want this job with all my heart, I would not seek it. It would be a betrayal to you as students were I to take this job without a willingness to serve and a devotion which would prod me to work twenty-four hours a day for you. . . . Concerning 'professional' athletics, I do not believe professionalism as such exists here at Carolina. I believe in a winning team and always will."

In a prepared statement Evans said "the next few weeks will give the campus a detailed discussion of most of the problems which will face the Student Government next year. The principles, purposes and records must be again restated in no uncertain terms. . . . I would like to challenge each student to compare and consider the presidential candidates on the basis of our records and our programs, and on this basis to vote for the person who they feel can most effectively lead the Student Govern-

Four Students Are Suspended Here

Four students have been suspended from school indefinitely from Carolina by the Men's Honor Council, according to a report released this week.

Large students were found guilty of cheating and one of plagiarism, according to the report.

One student was acquitted by the council of charges of plagiarism.

The report issued by Clerk George Ragsdale is as follows:

CASE ONE
A case was brought before the council charged with cheating on a Social Science 11 final exam. He pleaded guilty to the charge and admitted that he had copied material from his text book into several blue books, taken these blue books into the final, and then copied passages from these into another blue book which he handed in to the professor. He admitted his guilt readily and was found guilty and suspended indefinitely from Carolina, but the council made the recommendation that he be allowed to re-enter school at the beginning of the Summer Session this year because of his straightforwardness and complete co-operation with the council.

CASE TWO
Two students were charged with copying from each other's paper during a Psychology 40 final exam. These two boys were seen by several other people who turned them in to a member of the Council. The boys plead guilty.

One of them stated that he "just wasn't thinking" and copied five or six answers. The other stated that he had always been aware of the Honor System and had always respected it, but that he needed a C in the course and didn't think he could get it without help, so he copied from the other defendant's paper. Both were found guilty and were suspended indefinitely from Carolina.

It is well to mention here that the several persons who turned these boys in did the right thing and are to be commended for their action.

CASE THREE

Two boys were questioned concerning themes which they handed in which were practically identical. One boy stated that he knew nothing about how they could have gotten that way, while the other said that he had read the other boy's theme and wrote on the same subject. The boys were room mates.

The second boy said that the other didn't know anything about it, and that he himself hadn't copied the theme, but had read it and then wrote his own. He said that he didn't plagiarize, but it became increasingly clear to the council that he didn't know exactly what plagiarism entailed.

The themes were word for word (see HONOR COUNCIL page 3)

First Seminar: Small Industry

By BOB MICH
The "Business Fair" will present a varied cast of speakers headed by the chief executive of this state, Gov. Luther H. Hodges. The fair is to be sponsored by the School of Business Administration through the Alpha Kappa Psi, professional business fraternity.

Heading the first of three seminars will be Gerald F. Albright, director of the Small Industries Section, Dept. of Conservation and Development in Raleigh. Albright will speak on the "Development of Small Industries in North Carolina."

Speaking during the same session with Albright will be Ben Smith of the Black Panther Co., Sanford, and Jack Worsnam of Southern Practices Engineering, Greensboro.

Albright will deliberate on how small industries have helped place this state on a higher economic basis and how North Carolina can attract more industry and new factories into the state. Smith and Worsnam will reply to Albright's statements and tell how small industry has helped them and what advantages small industries have in this state.

Albright is qualified for his position as head of the Small Industries Section having graduated from Indiana University with a degree in business law and corporate organization. He has served the municipal utility of his home-town as auditor, business manager and comptroller.

He later became associated with an Indianapolis accounting firm where for several years he specialized in corporate reorganization, system installations and business consulting. After entering his own business and organizing Central Broadcasting Corp., which purchased and operated a Richmond, Ind., radio station, Albright sold out and moved to Raleigh where he became general manager of WNAO. Following the subsequent sale of the station, under his direction, he took a temporary assignment as Industrial Development Engineer for the Dept. of Conservation and Development in the capital.

While handling the location of the two General Electric plants in Hickory and Hendersonville, he was impressed by the need for the development of small industries within the state, using local capital, know-how, and resources.

Albright organized, in September, 1954, the Small Industries Section and has served as its director from that time. Under his guidance, 74 new small industries have been established in North Carolina and an equal number of projects are in process.

During the time he worked with this state's small industry development, Albright wrote and published a book guiding community development of industry. This book is not only used by towns in this state, but also by communities in several other states.

In order to obtain outstanding speakers and displays for the two exhibit showings, a student committee from the School of Business Administration went to Raleigh, Greensboro, Durham and other cities in the state where they interviewed the Governor, Albright, Waynick and other industrial executives.

The concept of the Business Fair this year is one which has been commended by educators and North Carolina businessmen alike for its educational value, as well as for the experience which those who participate in the planning and execution of such a production gain.
