Hodges Urges Students To Teach Honor System

Honor Council Chairman Luther Hodges Jr. Saturday urged all students to apply for Orientation Counselor positions.

Hodges, speaking on behalf of the Honor Council, said the "importance of Orientation to the Carolina Honor System can never be over estimated."

"It is through Orientation that the new student receives his initial, and most enduring, impression of that all-important Carolina 'Way of Life — our Honor System.'"

He appealed to students to "speak of the benefits of the Carolina Honor System to the new students."

The Honor System is something to be proud of, he said, "but the tradition must be preserved by special emphasis on the individual's responsibilities to the student community."

"Our Honor System depends on interest and participation," Hodges said, "and it is to this end that the Orientation Committee, through the applications of conscientious students, seeks to initiate the class of 1961."

The only way the Honor System will survive, he said is for students to be willing "to assume the responsibility of educating the students of tomorrow."

The deadline for turning in application for the position of Orientation Counselor is Tuesday.

Application forms may be secured from Graham Memorial, the YMCA, Library, Lenoir Hall, and the Monogram Club, and should be returned either to the Y or Graham Memorial an announcement said.

At 7:30 p.m. in 106 Carroll Hall, there will be a meeting of all applicants and a test given on the material in the 1956 Counselor's Manual. The manuals may be borrowed from the YMCA, Library, or Graham Memorial, said the announcement.

Aycock To Be Speaker At Leadership Training

UNC Chancellor-elect William B. Aycock will be the featured speaker at the Student Government Leadership Training Weekend Sunday, April 28, at Camp Monroe, it was announced yesterday.

All persons interested in meeting and knowing more about the new chancellor have been urged to attend the Leadership Weekend during April 27 and 28.

Persons who wish to attend the Camp Monroe weekend were reminded yesterday the deadline for returning postal cards which they received earlier is Wednesday, the day before spring vacation.

Coeds Model Spring Fashions

Spring fashions around the Carolina campus are modeled by these coeds from Chapel Hill. They are (left to right) Miss Stuart Pendergraft, showing a fashionable cotton for afternoon and informal evening parties and dates; Miss Nancy Royster, displaying a silk bouffant dress accented with matching jacket and hat, to be featured in the Easter Parade; Miss Sandra Kednocker, modeling her sailor girl sheath for all campus and class activities and Miss Ka Smith, wearing sports plaid bermudas and contrasting shirt that can be worn at the beach or for athletic events on campus.

'Place Of Worship' Is Planned In YMCA Building For Students

"A place of worship for all students" is being planned by a group of Carolina students on the second floor of the Y building, Miss Sandy Clarke announced Friday.

Miss Clarke spoke for the group working on the prayer-room. She asked all students interested in helping the committee finish the project to call her at the Tri Delta House or to leave their names at the Y office.

Norman Gillis is building an altar and cross for the room, which is located in the old Town Girls' Room. Remaining work on the room includes painting the walls, sanding and polishing the floor and sanding and painting several chairs.

Chairs were given to the project by the University.

When asked how the plan got started Miss Clarke said several students recognized the need for such a place of worship. "The campus needs a focal point and I know of no better one."

Besides Miss Clarke and Gillis the group includes Miss Janet Harper, Miss Kathy Webster, Bert Warren and Pat Leonard.

Post Office Here Feels Effects From Argument

The recent national controversy between Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield and the House Appropriations Committee was felt in Chapel Hill yesterday when delivery service was curtailed for the entire day.

Effects from the post office-budget squabble will continue to be felt throughout the week on a less noticeable scale, however. Beginning tomorrow, the local post office will keep its windows open 8 1/2 hours (from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.).

Postal officials here announced this schedule will be in keeping with Summerfield's directive which went into effect mid-night Friday. They further indicated the cut actually entails only 30 minutes from the regular schedule for this time of year.

Those areas to be effected by the Postmaster General's directive Friday included:

1—A halt in window service in all post offices on Saturday.

2—No delivery of mail on Saturdays except special delivery.

3—Reduction in the collection of Saturday mail to the limited schedule which normally prevails on Sundays.

4—Keeping windows open only 8 1/2 hours per day Monday through Friday.

5—An embargo, starting April 29, on third class mail and an end to the sale of postal money orders. Although Summerfield was granted $41 million of the $47 million he originally requested, he has indicated his intention to persist to hold out for the full "and necessary" amount.

Five class reunions will be held in connection with the annual alumni day at the UNC School of Medicine on Thursday. Reunions will be held by the classes of 1907, 1917, 1927, 1937 and 1947.
