Queen Booms Demand For Tickets To Maryland Game

By BOB PACE

News from the White House that Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip will witness the Carolina-Maryland football game October 19 at College Park, Md., has hit the UNC campus like a bombshell, touching off a wild demand for tickets.

The impact of the announcement was reflected on the UNC Sports Publicity Office which has been busy all week handling requests for tickets for the game.

Both the UNC and Maryland athletic departments are predicting that the game will be a complete sellout.

This game will be a highlight from several points of view.

QUEEN ELIZABETH II
To Witness Carolina Game

For the Queen and the Duke it will be their first football game.

For Coach Jim Tatum it will hold special interest as Maryland is the school he left to come to Carolina.

And for the teams, it is undoubtedly their first and only "Command Performance."

For both universities it will mean world wide publicity. Thus for both teams it has become a game that "must be won."

Official host to the royal couple will be Governor Theodore R. McKeldin of Maryland who will personally narrate the game to Her Majesty. A representative of the British Embassy informed the Weekly that the plans had been made for the Queen to attend the game in accordance with an express desire of Her Majesty to attend an American sports event.

He pointed out that while the Prince may well have been instrumental in persuading the Queen to attend the game we should remember that Her Majesty is also a great sports enthusiast.

Stating that most of the arrangements for the royal visit had been left to Governor McKeldin, the embassy spokesman

Macon Cheek English Prof, Dies In Maine

Dr. Philip Macon Cheek, 51, associate professor of English, died August 7 of a coronary thrombosis while visiting Prof. and Mrs. Robert Pratt at their home in Friendship, Me.

A member of the English Department faculty since 1945, he was a native of Warren County.

Mr. Cheek received his B.A. degree from the University in 1927, his M.A. in 1928 and his Ph.D. in 1931. He began teaching the classics in college, interrupting his career for service in Army Air Force during the World War II.

It was at the end of his tenure of service in 1945 that he joined the UNC faculty.

At the news of his death, his colleagues in the English Department described their feelings toward him with the following:

"Macon Cheek had the power to interest, encourage and inspire his students to an extraordinary degree. The registration for his course in Milton quadrupled during the few years that he taught at the University.

"His students did much more than simply respect and admire him—they revered and venerated him. They were awed by his great learning, they were inspired by his devotion to the literature he deemed highest, they were enthralled by his power to communicate his learning and devotion."

Playmakers To End Season With 'The Insect Comedy'

By DICK BURROUGHS

The final theatrical production of the summer, The Insect Comedy, will be presented tonight and tomorrow night at the Forest Theatre beginning at 8:30 o'clock.

More than 40 people have been cast for this Czecho-Slovakian fantasy—which is a satire on the insignificances of the human race—the majority of whom are Junior-Playmakers from the high schools around the eastern part of the United States.

This comedy is the main project for the Junior-Playmakers, who are here for a five-week course in the theater. Not only are the high-schoolers taking most of the parts but they also have built the majority of the sets and props along with preparing the intricate costumes which are needed in order to depict the various insects seen during the play.

The main purpose of the five-week course is to teach the fundamental aspects of the theater. There are four courses offered from which a student must choose three to take each day. The classes are taught by people connected with the Carolina Playmakers and include "Introduction to the Theater," "Acting," "Voice and Diction" and "Stage Craft."

It is unfortunate that there are so many young ladies in the group and so few of the male sex. Many of the parts which are played by girls could be carried

Big Puzzle Contest Solved; Yeggs Win Bermuda Trip

Three dapper gun-toting bandits who said they held up and robbed the Apex branch bank of the Durham Bank & Trust Co. of $42,000 several weeks ago broke the Summer School Weekly's Great Puzzle Contest wide open today when they calmly walked into the newspaper's offices in Graham Memorial and claimed the grand prize of a free trip to Bermuda for "capturing" themselves.

The trio of hip-swingers, their faces masked by red, blue and yellow polka dot bandanas, readily admitted their guilt but refused to tell who they were.

"What!" they exclaimed. Give you our names and have them lousy cops come down to Bermuda inquiring for us and spoiling our vacation. Nuttin' doing."

The tallest of the three then twirled both his guns, stuck one in the editor's ribs, and said:

"And don't overlook that we came in person instead of you coming after us, so we get that bonus of three additional days at one of them plushie hotels."

The contest judges looked askance at this turn of affairs and went into a huddle.

Emerging with broad smiles some moments later, they agreed to give the yeggs tickets and expenses for the Bermuda trip as prize winners upon condition the bandits put up 10 per cent of their loot as evidence of good
