Cagers Work Out—What About A Pep Rally?

Sports notes from here and there. The nation's number one basketball team can currently be seen in Woollen Gym about everyday, but not as a unit. Most of the fellows have been going down during their spare time and working out in pick-up games. Coach Frank McGuire isn't around to watch though, because the Tar Heel coach can't get close to the practice courts until the ACC gives the word. This, of course, applies to all the ACC coaches.

Just wondering if there are any plans for another pep rally Friday night. Last week's session was a good one and it seems a shame not to give it another go tomorrow night. We haven't heard of any plans but we hope there are some.

Speaking of college spirit, it looks like we've got a fine group of cheerleaders this fall. The guys and gals seem to be right in there pitching—the gals are not hard on the eyes either.

Ed Sutton Now With Washington Redskins

Looks like there might be some relief in sight for the Carolina-Clemson game this weekend. Last Saturday the heat was a demoralizer for the fans and the players, but the weatherman says it should be cooler this Saturday.

Carolina coach's definition of a halfback: "Twice as much as a quarterback." That's a new one on us.

Remember Ed Sutton? He was Carolina's fine halfback of a year ago. Now he's with the Washington Redskins and doing very well. We got to see Ed a lot while the Redskins were training in Winston-Salem the last of August and first of September and he's real happy with the "Skins. Everybody connected with Washington is confident Ed will make the grade in the pro ranks and many predict he'll be one of the outstanding rookies in the NFL. He'll be going to mid school at Tennessee when the season ends.

World Series Should Be One Of Best

Who're you picking to take the World Series? We'll take the Yankees (but we're partial). It should be a great series. The people of Milwaukee are so happy about winning the pennant that they probably won't be crying in their beer if the Braves lose. Wouldn't be surprised, however, if they're not favored by the time the first game starts Oct. 2 in Yankee Stadium.

While we're talking about baseball, look for Casey Stengel and Fred Haney to win the "Manager of the Year" awards. Fred Hutchinson might upset Haney in the NL though.

Interesting anecdote: North Carolina State is way behind Carolina in the won-lost book overall, but the Wolfpack has a 3-0 mark against Jim Tatum. State beat Carolina in 1942 when Tatum was here then again in '56 and '57.

Gamecocks Sweating Wofford Game

Look for Wake Forest to be better this season. The Deacs will miss Bill Barnes and Charlie Carpenter, but have more experience than a year ago. Wake opens its 1957 schedule against the University of Florida in Gainesville Saturday.

Word from South Carolina is that the Gamecocks are sweating their game with Wofford College Saturday night. How pessimistic can you get?

The University of Virginia will invade the Tar Heel State three times this season. The Cavaliers play Duke in Durham Saturday, Wake Forest in Winston-Salem next Saturday and close the season against Carolina here November 30.

Tickets Still On Sale For Terps

In Clemson's 66-0 rout of Presbyterian Saturday, sophomores scored six Tiger touchdowns. The Tigers are reported loaded with second-year talent.

Our prediction for the game of the week in the Atlantic Coast Conference: State vs. Maryland. The teams seem to be about evenly matched.

A reminder that tickets to the Carolina-Maryland game are still on sale. It's Caravan weekend and should be lots of fun. Incidentally, a committee will meet tomorrow to discuss plans for the Caravan.

Gridders Prep; DeCantis Back; Lowe Still Out

The once-beaten, but still confident Tar Heel gridgers went through another closed practice session yesterday under the watchful eye of Head Coach Jim Tatum. Passing, both offensive and defensive, was the main item on the agenda.

All the quarterbacks and halfbacks limbered their arms while running the Carolina pass patterns. Although passing was reported a Big Blue strong point, the air attack was ragged against the Wolfpack Saturday.

Also sharing much of the spotlight was a drill against Clemson passing. The Tigers displayed a strong aerial game against little Presbyterian College while humbling PC 66-0 this past weekend.

The injury list improved 50 per cent with Emil DeCantis' return to practice. He suffered a bruised chest in Saturday's State encounter. Nelson Lowe, sophomore quarterback, is still out due to a pulled ligament.

The squad has shown good spirit in drills and nothing would please them more than upsetting the applecart for defending Atlantic Coast Conference champion, Clemson, in Kenan Stadium Saturday afternoon.

into Central High School yesterday and then stood guard over their classrooms, integrating the school with United States arms.

The regular army troopers, in battle dress, bayoneted one man and clubbed a second with a rifle butt in a show of force that kept the white crowd moving and well away.

Paratroopers stood outside classes the six Negro girls and three boys attended and escorted them from one classroom to another.

Some white students left school when the Negroes calmly walked in with their armed escort. Out of the 2,000 white students about 750 were absent.

It was impossible to estimate the crowd because it was scattered on three streets bordering the school. People stood in lawns, on porches and inside houses and buildings near the scene. The only congregation permitted was more than a block away from the perimeter of soldiers and this crowd made no move to cause trouble.

About 350 rifle-armed troops formed the first "line of defense" and later another 100 were thrown into the line to lengthen the perimeter beyond which no outsider could pass.

The scene was completely calm

Frat, Grad Tag Teams Enter Murals Program

By ED ROWLAND

Four graduate schools and 27 fraternities entered teams in the 1957 intramural tag football competition at a meeting Tuesday night in the gym.

Play in the graduate division begins Monday. Entering teams were the dental, medical and law schools, and the Peacocks (physical education graduate students). Intramural department official Tommy Johnson said after the meeting that he hoped even more teams will be entered in the division.

Johnson said 27 fraternities have entered the Blue division, explaining that Blue teams are composed of the best players in the fraternity. Due to fraternity rush, play in that division will not begin until Oct. 7.

Johnson also announced that the first meeting of dormitory intramural managers will be held Tuesday night. Play will begin Oct. 7.

Bill Mason, ATO, and Richie Smith, law school, were appointed chairmen of committees for nominating officers in the fraternity and graduate division. Each heads a three-man group.

Fundamentals Stressed By Rabb In Baseball Sessions

By ELLIOTT COOPER

Despite the fact that all of the baseball players out for fall workouts have had experience, Coach Walter Rabb is devoting this first week to fundamentals and conditioning. Infield and outfield practice is being held in addition to a review of pitching and catching techniques.

Another purpose of this fall practice is to screen the forty freshmen who want to tryout for the freshman team. Speaking on this subject Coach Rabb said, "We want to screen anyone who is interested and has a baseball background during this fall practice." Among the hopefuls for Freshman Coach Pat Earley's spring squad are several freshmen on partial scholarships.

The roll for fall practice includes sixty men, forty of whom were out yesterday. Due to the varying lab schedules it has been impossible to get all the boys out on any given day. Next week the squad will begin scrimmaging.

There are a number of men back from last year's team. Graduation, however, cut heavily into the team as it took away the entire outfield and several members of the pitching staff. In an attempt to remedy this pitching weakness, Rabb is working hard with his young hurlers. Junior Ben Harding, a left-hander, and classmate Doug Stinson saw limited action last year but are expected to pitch regularly this season. Up from last year's freshman team is another pitcher, Wayne Young. These three plus Senior Charles Aycock are slated to carry most of the pitching burden.

Jim Tatum UNC Soccer Team Undergoing Surprised Many Experiments This Season By Award

By JIM PURKS

A fullback or right inside last year, a goalie or halfback this year.

That's the general picture of the varsity soccer squad this year as Coach Marvin Allen is conducting several "experiments" with the players in a search to find a winning eleven.

Quite a number of players, who originally played one particular position, now find themselves in a new position . . . and, they are doing a good job in their new try-out positions.

Take Ted Youhanna, for instance. Ted, a dribbling wizard from Iraq who played on the forward line last year, is now using his talented feet at the left fullback position.

Youhanna promises to do a good job in filling the position formerly occupied by Ted Jones, now in law school, who played left fullback last year.

Then, there's another Ted; this time Ted Smith. Smith was a halfback last year—this year he's on the forward line. The tall, blond-haired senior from Sea Cliff, New York, has been the most impressive player during the team's five spirited scrimmages. And what encourages Coach Allen even more is the fact that Smith kicks equally hard and accurate with his left and right foot.

In other shifts on the forward line, Rick Grausman, who played right wing last year, now finds himself on left wing while Coleman Barks, last year's top scorer, has moved into the right wing slot.

These three men, combined with two new faces on the forward line.

Head football coach Jim Tatum was the surprised winner of the University Club's service award, which was presented to him in the form of a trophy and plaque during a pep rally held Friday.

Just what does the service award mean? University Club president Frank Inman of Sanford, in his presentation speech said that the service award may be given to "any person connected with the University of North Carolina in any way. The recipient may keep the trophy for one school year, and the plaque forever."

"The award is to be made," Inman said, "to someone who has rendered some type of outstanding service to the University. The major merits considered are effort and participation."

Inman said that Tatum had been decided upon as the winner last year, "but the presentation was delayed for various reasons."

He said that Tatum received the award "in recognition of his outstanding work in developing Carolina's football team, student and team spirit and morals, and for his cooperation with the student body."

In his acceptance, Tatum said "it's the biggest trophy I ever received and the nicest, because it came as a complete surprise."

Just A Word Can Make A Hitter

MILWAUKEE, Wis. — (AP)—Wes Covington, who got a second chance in the big time when the Braves traded Bobby Thompson, looked at his 292 batting average today and recalled a casual conversation that helped him become a dangerous hitter.

One day, shortly after Covington's recall from the Wichita farm club, Red Schoendienst and Paul Waner, the Braves' batting coach, were talking about the importance of wrist action to hitters. As the two talked, Schoendienst demonstrated the points by gripping a bat.

"Any time anybody talks about hitting," Covington said today, "I listen. I just happened to overhear them. They weren't talking about me, but as I listened I realized that with my grip, my wrists were locked. I wasn't getting that little roll of the wrists that gives the bat that final flick and adds the power."

Just shows you what you can learn by listening. Afterwards Schoendienst spent more time with Covington, one of the most powerful hitters in the game, and Wes' batting average started to climb. The big left fielder was hitting .125 when he rejoined the Braves. Before today's game with St. Louis, he was hitting .292.

In less than three months Covington has become one of the most feared hitters in the line-up of the newly crowned National League champions. This left handed power hitter with less than two seasons of major league experience already has hit some of the longest drives on record. He could cause the Yankees sleepless nights.

Covington's hitting was one of the highlights of the Braves' 10-game winning streak in mid-August. During that stretch, which propelled Milwaukee to an 8 and one-half game lead, this 6-0, 205-pound Negro from North Carolina batted .379 and drove in 13 runs, tops on the club. Before today's game his RBI total was 65.

sophomores John Ghnanin and Mike Thompson, promise to shape into a formidable offense.

Defensively, Coach Allen is giving Dave Corkey, a stalwart at center fullback last year, a try-out at a halfback position, hoping that the powerful boots of Corkey and Captain Bill Blair may be able to feed the forward line.

Bob Borden, a halfback last year, and Pete Killinger, a left inside, are currently being given a trial run at the two other fullback positions.

In the vital goalie position, which was vacated by graduating star Chuck Hartman, former fullbacks Jim Rattay and Nick Zlotnicki are trying out along with two other candidates.

Judo Anyone?

Judo, anyone?

A group of students, organized by Buddy Shepard, is interested in holding judo classes and meetings during the year. All students who know the fundamentals of judo plus those who would like to learn are invited to attend an introductory meeting in the wrestling room of Woollen Gym at 3:30 p.m. Thursday.
