Victory Bell Is Back At UNC, At Last

At approximately 4:30 Saturday afternoon a tremendous group of Carolina students swarmed across a muddy Duke Stadium turf and laid rightful claim to an object which Tar Heel fans and students have been wanting since way back in 1950 — The Victory Bell.

After seven long years of listening to the Duke students toll the bell vehemently and being able to do nothing but sit and hope, this symbolic clatter of conquest was once again in the hands of the Chapel Hillians.

What had ensued prior to this gala reclamation will live in the hearts of present Carolina students forever. They had just seen the culmination of two years of diligent work by a fellow named Jim Tatum who literally picked Carolina football up by its boot straps and brought it out of the pits of defeatism and placed it on the football map again. Carolina had beaten Duke and in doing so, had insured itself of a winning season for the first time since 1949. It was also the first time since '49 that the Tar Heels had beaten Duke.

Everybody Did His Share In Victory

Yes, it was a great day for Carolina. It was a tremendous and harmonious effort on the part of the entire Tar Heel team. Down 13-0 early in the second quarter, the Tar Heels absolutely refused to give up, and when tackle Phil Blazer sent the Tar Heel's fourteenth point through the uprights after 4:50 of the third period there was that feeling that everything was going to be all right; that Carolina had finally reached the football heights of the Choo Choo Justice era.

Who can possibly single out any one Tar Heel as the "man who did it?" Certainly quarterback Jack Cummings did a lion's share of the work. But every passer has to have a receiver and Cummings had several Saturday.

Captain Buddy Payne, one of the most improved ball players this writer has ever seen, was everywhere, offensively and defensively. The TV announcer called him "Monotonous Payne," a tribute to his great all-round play. Centers Don Koes and Jim Jones did a marvelous job, and the entire Carolina line was on its toes throughout. The offensive and defensive work of the Carolina backfield contributed vitally to the victory.

Tatum also got in his two cents worth, concealing the single wing on a couple of plays and running the double reverse several times. All things added up to a great Carolina victory.

No Sour Grapes On Orange Bowl Decision

Duke got the Orange Bowl bid and there should be no "sour grapes" on the part of Carolina fans. True, it seemed the Tar Heels might have a good chance of attaining the bid after the Duke victory, but the ACC Bowl Committee felt that Duke was the logical choice.

The committee is a worthy and responsible organization and its decision should not be questioned. Duke, despite its poor showing in its final five games, was the conference champion (since State was ineligible) and it was upon this, apparently, that the committee based its decision.

The only complaint which we have about the whole situation is that the committee's rules regarding the bowl representative are too vague. Misinterpretation has been prevalent throughout the Orange Bowl speculation because, we believe, nobody actually understood upon what basis the representative is chosen.

Bowl Bid Seems Doubtful From Here

There has been some talk of Carolina getting a bid to either the Gator or Cotton Bowl provided it beats Virginia this Saturday. This, in our opinion, is mere abstract speculation.

The contract governing the ACC-Orange Bowl affiliation specifically stipulates that no other ACC team shall participate in a New Year's Day bowl game. The only group which can waive this clause is the Orange Bowl Committee, and there is strong doubt in our mind that the OBC will do this for either Carolina or Clemson.

Of course, by the most meticulous interpretation of the rules, the Gator Bowl is not played on New Year's Day, thus leaving a loophole for the ACC Committee. However, it seems to us that the Orange Bowl stipulations actually included any post-season bowl game since at the time of the contract the Gator Bowl was played Jan. 1.

The ACC committee will weigh the ethics of using this loophole and, we believe, will content itself with sending Duke to the Orange Bowl. The Orange Bowl pact, incidentally, expires at the termination of this season.

Goldsmith's Proposal Should Be Considered

It is a shame that Carolina will have to close out this fine season during the Thanksgiving holidays when a majority of the students will miss the game. Many of the Tar Heels will be playing their final game in Kenan Stadium Saturday and they simply won't receive the tribute they so richly deserve from the students.

Student Legislature representative Al Goldsmith introduced a resolution last week "urging the Athletic Department not to schedule home football games during Thanksgiving Holidays."

Goldsmith's proposal is worthy of great consideration. Had we played throughout the season without a layoff, the season would have ended Saturday and there would have been no excuse for the final game to be marred with below normal student support.

We recognize too, the obstacles which the Athletic Department encounters when composing a schedule. However, it would be good for all concerned if future schedules could be arranged to end before the Thanksgiving break.

Christy Holds Big Margin

GREENSBORO, N. C., Nov. 25 (AP)—Halfback Dick Christy made his last performances as a member of the North Carolina State football team a memorable one.

He not only kicked the field goal that gave his team a 29-26 victory over South Carolina, but he scored all of his team's points to take over the lead in the Atlantic Coast Conference individual scoring race.

His performance also eclipsed the single game scoring mark of 26 points held jointly by Duke's Wray Carlton and Virginia's Jim Bakhtiar.

Christy leads the scoring parade with 83 points. Carlton is second with 71. Both have completed their seasons. Bakhtiar is third with 43.

AIDS TAR HEEL CAUSE—Carolina center Ron Koes was one of the standouts in the Tar Heel's 21-13 victory over Duke Saturday. Koes shared the pivot duties with another Tar Heel star, Jim Jones and the two were instrumental in the victory.

It's All Over Now, But What A Time The Fans Had Watching It

By ED ROWLAND

DURHAM, Nov. 25—The scene of the battle was desolate today, but the scars remained.

The turf in the center of Duke Stadium was torn and muddy where the Tar Heels and the Blue Devils had charged up and down Saturday.

An orange here and there lent a bit of color to the rain-drenched scene.

Water filled the concrete holes at each end of the field where once steel goal posts stood. A shoe lay on its side on the muddy track circling the field. But Saturday—it was a different story.

The Duke marching band opened the official activities with a colorful show of marching and fireworks at 1:30 p. m. The Duke stands roar drowned out feeble Carolina attempts to get attention.

At 2 p. m. the teams came on the field, television spectators could see, and the game got under way.

For half an hour or more Duke had its day, and the east stands only mumbled and took another drink.

The Duke Blue Devil silently taunted Carolina fans by standing atop the guest boxes behind and to the left of them. Duke cheerleaders and supporters came by tossing oranges labeled "Have a big orange; courtesy of the town Men's Club."

Then the Tar Heels began their comeback and the fans began to come alive.

THINGS LOOKED BETTER

By halftime everyone was feeling better, so the Carolina band put on a slightly wet, though good, show. Rameses was taken on a trip around the field by Amy Morse and glowered at the Duke fans. Not long thereafter the Blue Devil was forced to climb on the goal posts to escape Rameses.

When the second half began things looked better. Carolina received and it wasn't long before they were out in front to stay. When the 14th point was booted true by Phil Blazer, all heck broke loose on the Carolina sides. The TV cameramen even noticed the commotion and trained their lenses across the field.

Students yelled and cheered, then asked their buddy in the next seat, "Is it really true?"

It was, and the Tar Heels made another touchdown to prove it.

Tar Babies Play Thursday

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The Carolina and Duke Freshman football teams head-on in the annual Cerebral Palsy Benefit Game here on Thanksgiving Day, with the action in Kenan at 2:00 p. m.

Carolina's Tar Babies have a 3-1 season record with wins over Maryland, Wake Forest, and Virginia. Their only loss came at the hands of the powerful State College Wolflets.

Duke's Blue Imps have an identical 3-1 season slate, their wins coming against South Carolina, Clemson, and Wake Forest. Their only setback was also against State, 34-14.

The boys most likely to give the Tar Babies trouble Thursday are Don Alban, the quarterback, and Jim Bush, a driving fullback.

GOOD SHAPE

In the Physical Fitness department, the Tar Babies are pretty well set except at tackle. Left tackle Jim Shumate is out for the season with a bad back and right tackle Bill Crabtree is on the doubtful list with a bad ankle sustained in the Virginia game. Other than that, everyone is in good shape and ready to go.

Freshman Coach Bud Carson said yesterday that "The boys have looked much sharper in practices than everbefore. The loss of our two first line tackles will hurt us but I think it will be a good game. I am sure that it will take our best effort of the year to beat Duke."

Ever meet a fanatic?

He's got just one thing uppermost in his mind. If he's looking for a job he's thinking only of pay or only of security. Reasonable men, however, weigh these and many other factors when they're evaluating career possibilities. Such factors as opportunity, challenging work, training, professional associates—things fanatics never bother to consider.

The Bell Telephone Companies have a booklet for reasonable men. It's called "Challenge and Opportunity." It's not the sort of thing that'll make a fanatic's eyes light up, but it ought to interest a thoughtful young man—whatever his college background—who is weighing career possibilities. Get it from your Placement Officer or send the coupon.
