Win Gives UNC 6-2 ACC Mark

If you're one of those sports enthusiast who likes his football all year long, you can get back into the gridiron spirit come Feb. 10—that's when Jim Tatum's Carolina Tar Heels begin their 20-day spring training session.

ACC schools are allowed 20 days practice in a calendar period of 36 days and Tatum plans to close things with the annual Blue-White game in Kenan Stadium on March 15. The Tar Heels will have regular intra-squad scrimmages every Saturday except Feb. 17 in Kenan Stadium. Otherwise, their workouts will be held on Navy Field.

The Tar Heels will be practicing every Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday and take off the other three days in order to get in a few flicks with the books. All sessions will be open to the public.

What will be Tatum's main concern during this important period?

"First of all we've got to find a replacement for Buddy Payne at left end," Tatum said yesterday. "We've got several real good boys capable of taking over there; the problem is to come up with the best replacement."

Tatum figures he's got to establish a capable fullback for next season. Giles Gaca, who came into his own at that post late in the season, graduates in June leaving a gap for someone to fill. Bob Shupin and Ed Lipski are the leading candidates there, both having seen a good deal of action at fullback last season. Tatum also plans to try quarterback Curt Hathaway and halfback Don Coker at the line plugging post. He's also got several freshman who might be able to do the job.

"We need some depth at tackle also," commented Tatum, whose 1957 team surprised everybody with a 6-4 record.

Scholastically, the Tar Heels suffered light but major casualties, Mac Turlington, a standout end last season is not in school now, nor is sophomore tackle Don Stallings.

The two boys are taking correspondence courses and plan to attend summer school and Tatum is still hopeful they'll be back next fall.

Ever heard of a football lab? Well Duke University is holding one this spring. It's called the Dixie Clinic and it features coaches of all the Big Four schools.

This unique innovation is scheduled for March 17-19 at Duke. According to the program, the clinic will cover all phases of the game and demonstrations be conducted by players of the Big Four who'll be in the middle of spring training during that period.

Reservations are now being accepted for the three-day clinic.

Sports quickies—York Larese, the highly touted freshman basketball star here last year is back on crutches. York had an operation on both knees before the season started and was counted out this year. He was off the crutches for awhile but he's had to have this another knee operation which will keep him on crutches for another six or seven weeks. "I'm feeling fine though," smiles York. . . . Some of the Carolina baseballers are already limbering up and there are a few sore joints around. . . . South Carolina basketball coach Frank Johnson likes the idea of a postseason all-star game between the best seniors from the ACC and a group from other sections. "I like the idea of picking the players from the whole conference, rather than just the two Carolinas as has been suggested," comments Johnson. . . . It is conceivable that the ACC won't have an All-American cager this season. . . . There are no real high scorers in the conference, and it always seems that that's the way the A-A's are chosen. . . .

Mermen Top ECC; Still Unbeaten

GREENVILLE — The Carolina swimmers made it eight in a row here yesterday with a 33-33 victory over the East Carolina mermen. It was the second time this season the Carolinians had beaten the Pirates.

The undefeated tankers had things more or less their way all afternoon as they won quite handily, though not as easily as the last time the two teams met when the Tar Heels won it 63-21.

Rose High Man
Walt Rose was high point man for Carolina in the meet as he continued his fine overall performance. Brent Nash performed very well as lead-off man in the 400-yard relay.

The closest race of the day was the breaststroke, with Mac Mahaffey taking it for the Tar Heels. Ned Meekins dropped a heartbreaker in the diving competition, as he lost by but 8/10 of a point to Midgett of East Carolina. A pool record was set by Sawyer of the Pirates in the backstroke, as he thrashed the water for the record time of 2:19.3.

The mermen's next encounter is with always tough Florida in Chapel Hill on Feb. 8.
