A VALENTINE MESSAGE TO A SHY CHICK-A-BIDDY

Wee Sleekit cow'rin' tim'rous beastie, though life be dull and dreams be yeasty, this missive tells you how you can hog-tie and brand yourself a MAN.

Man (homo sapiens), though not, precisely speaking, roaring hot, still serves to put you through your paces and flaunt in other ladies' faces. He can be trained to fetch and carry, and speak, and beg, and even marry. But ere the creature can be taught he must, alas, somehow be caught.

One thing there is about the male that makes a thoughtful girl go pale. Although his mind can grasp the far gyrations of the evening star, he's slow at love, and never sees a nice gal's possibilities. Unless you others raise a fuss he's only aware of brazen hussies.

A wise and older dame opines the best reply is Valentines. Send scads of witty ones and gay, that say the things you dare not say, until the poky thing perceives that you're the loveliest of Eves!

substitutes and the Duke lead mounted. Salz was the last to foul out with 1:16 to go.

Salz and Brennan paced the Carolina attack with 19 and 18 points respectively. Tommy Kearn's 15 was good for third and Lee Shaffer had 12. High man for Duke was Newcome with 21.

Carolina made 24 of 74 shots from the floor for a 32.4 percentage. Duke hit 29 of 64 for a 45.3 mark. Carolina had 27 of 43 foul shots (62.8) and Duke had 33 of 43 (76.8). The Blue Devils got the rebound advantage, 58 to 53.

First Half

The lead see-sawed back and forth with monotonous regularity in the first half. The Tar Heels were able to gain a substantial lead toward the latter part of the half, but a tremendous Duke rally in the last three and a half minutes closed a nine-point gap to the 36-35 halftime margin.

After five minutes of the first stanza the lead had changed hands three times and it sashayed seven more times before intermission.

It was largely through the 12-points effort of sophomore Salz that the Carolinians were able to keep the Durham invaders on the move. That along with the fact that the Tar Heels broke a 27-27 deadlock at the 4:19 mark on a goal by Brennan and dropped in nine straight points to grab a 37-29 lead. But then Duke came roaring right back and held the Chapel Hillians scoreless while it racked up eight quickies to put things back on almost even terms as the half ended.

The statistics were real close during the first 20 minutes. Both clubs got 29 rebounds. Duke hit 13 of 33 from the floor and the Tar Heels were good for 13 of 36. Duke was 9-16 from the charity line, Carolina was 10-18.
