

Carolina Quarterly Is Gaining Prestige In U.S.

The Carolina Quarterly, Carolina's student literary magazine, is gaining in prestige throughout the state and the nation.

Miss Mary Frances Kennon, assistant state school library adviser, has notified the staff that the Quarterly has been approved by the State Department of Public Instruction for purchase by high school libraries.

This places the Quarterly in a category with such noted publications as the Atlantic Monthly, Harper's Magazine, New Yorker and Saturday Review.

"Intro Bulletin," a literary newspaper of the arts published in New York, contains lengthy comment on the current issue of the Quarterly.

The article says that the tenth anniversary issue "opens with a forthright editorial by editor Christian Lefebure who feels that a large part of the world has fallen victim during the 1950's to the disease of Melancholia, a malady better known today as lethargy."

The article recognizes the aims of the present editor and comments, "In conjunction with this editorial declaration, the magazine announces a broadening of its scope to include not only creative writing and literary criticism but also contributions from all fields that may have something to say of interest and value to the active, awake and thinking man."

Native Freshman

Working behind the scenes to stimulate this growing recognition of UNC's literary magazine is editor Christian Lefebure. He was born in Compiegne, France, and attended school there until he came to the United States in 1951.

He continued his education in the States and was graduated from High School in New York City. During 1953-55 Lefebure served in the U. S. Army; he became a U. S. citizen in 1954.

After being discharged from the Army, Lefebure enrolled at Carolina where he is now a Junior in the College of Arts and Sciences. He is majoring in comparative literature.
