

Khrushchev Favors Disarmament Idea

LONDON, March 13 (AP)—Nikita Khrushchev said tonight the Soviet Union favors a disarmament system which provides for "reasonable international control." But he did not define what he regarded as reasonable.

The Soviet Communist Party boss again rejected any separate consideration of President Eisenhower's proposal that outer space be used only for peaceful purposes.

In a letter published in the leftist British weekly New Statement, Khrushchev claimed the Eisenhower plan was designed to isolate the question of the intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM). He said the Soviet Union possesses the ICBM but the United States does not.

He said the outer space plan in the Soviet view "must be examined as part of the general disarmament problem, including the question of prohibiting nuclear weapons and liquidating the U. S. military bases surrounding the Soviet Union."

Khrushchev's letter was the latest in a high level three-sided correspondence in which he, British philosopher Bertrand Russell and Secretary of the State Dulles have participated. All have been published in the new statement.

In his letter, dated March 5, Khrushchev skipped over the question of cutting back conventional weapons in which the Soviet Union has a huge advantage.

He said:

"The Soviet Union is ready to settle the disarmament problem as quickly as is practically possible in the interests of peace and security of the peoples. We have supported and still do support a radical solution of disarmament problem. We have been and still are in favor of the complete and unconditional prohibition of atomic and hydrogen weapons, the ending of their production and testing, the destruction of all existing stockpiles, and a substantial reduction in armed forces, armaments and military expenditures—all with the establishment of reasonable international control . . .

"We say: Let us act, let us impose a strict prohibition on atomic and hydrogen weapons, immediately cease testing these weapons and establish reasonable control."

The Western powers insist on gradual nuclear disarmament with safeguards at all stages to prevent cheating. They believe this would require a foolproof international inspection system.

By refusing to define what he meant by reasonable controls, Khrushchev left up in the air the question of whether the Soviet Union's views on disarmament had undergone any substantive change.

Ultimatum Given By Tunisians

TUNIS, March 13 (AP)—President Habib Bourguiba today gave the United States seven days to decide whether to support Tunisia in its dispute with France or see this country turn its back on the West.

He told a nation-wide radio audience events between now and the second anniversary of Tunisian independence, March 20, will determine his attitude.

"We are at the crossroads. We must choose," he said, after reminding Tunisians of his sympathies with the West.

Bourguiba claimed the continued presence of French troops here means "we are not truly free." As a sign of protest, he cancelled celebrations planned for Independence Day.

He warned that the Tunisians might have to start their battle for independence from France all over again, but did not say whether he meant by military means.

Since the French bombed what they claimed was an Algerian village base in Tunisia on Feb. 8, Bourguiba has been demanding that French troops quit his country.

The fiery Tunisian earlier told U.S. Deputy Undersecretary of State Robert Murphy and British Diplomat Harold Beley he would not make his regular weekly talk today in order not to hamper their "good offices" mission.

He changed his mind at the last minute, stung into action by what he called French comments on the British-American efforts to ease French-Tunisian quarrels.

Murphy and Beley did not see any Tunisian officials today.

Bourguiba claimed "French intransigence" had "brought the good offices to a crisis," he added: "Now is the time for a choice: America must choose a position . . . if in this situation, where the right path is not in doubt, we do not get enthusiastic support from the United States, exerting pressure on France to follow the path of righteousness, then people will be disillusioned with the oldest and greatest member of the free world.

"If America does not prove to me, to the Tunisian people and to all the other peoples of the world that they have left behind the world of imperialism, then the situation will be vastly changed . . .

"The 20th of March is the appointment we have given to the free world.

"I hope that on the 20th of March I will be able to say something in the constituent assembly which will drive away this gloom."

BRUNDAGE OUT

WASHINGTON, March 13 (AP)—Percival F. Brundage, who was alternately cussed as a spendthrift and a skintail, resigned today as budget director.

President Eisenhower moved Deputy Director Maurice H. Stans up to succeed him in the fiscal hot seat.

A. F. JENZANO Attends Opening

A. F. Jenzano Will Attend London Event

A. F. Jenzano, manager of the Morehead Planetarium here, will represent UNC at the opening of the 18th and newest planetarium in the world in London, England, Saturday.

Jenzano is expected to be the only representative of a U. S. planetarium at the London opening. He will spend two days there for a complete examination of the installation. There are only six planetaria in the western hemisphere, and the one here is the first planetarium in the world located on a college campus.

Proposal Branded 'Nonsense'

GREENSBORO, March 13 (AP)—One agriculture proposal now before Congress was branded "economic nonsense" and others similarly attacked here Thursday by the executive committee of the State Farm Bureau meeting here.

The increase in commercial corn acreage with an accompanying provision that 15 per cent of the corn land must be placed in the Soil Bank drew the "economic nonsense" label from the committee, meeting here preliminary to a session of the full board of directors here Friday.

Other proposals which would freeze price supports and acreage quotas of wheat, cotton, rice and peanuts at 1957 levels; freeze crop supports and increase acreage from 38 to 54 million acres and freeze dairy supports also drew fire from the committee. (Legislation along this line was passed by the Senate today.)

Much of the blame for present farm commodity surpluses was placed by the committee on minimum acreage allotments which allow farmers to plant a given acreage regardless of market demand for the commodity, and also to receive price support guarantees. The group cited wheat as an example of this, saying that farmers may legally plant 55,000,000 acres of wheat regardless of supply and demand conditions.

Then the committee pointed out that Farm Bureau policies have long favored support at 90 per cent of parity on all commodities, when supplies are kept in line with demand. As an example of this, a committee statement said:

"We understand that the senate agriculture committee has exempted tobacco from a pending bill which calls for a freeze on price supports and quotas. We think this wise, and feel that it shows that our position regarding other crops is sound. Tobacco already is supported 90 per cent of parity when supplies are kept in line with demand.

"Tobacco farmers have made every attempt, and have been successful in the long run, to keep tobacco supplies in line with demand. To say tobacco growers that they must plant a given number of acres of leaf regardless of the market demand would destroy the very tools with which they have so successfully operated their program.

"As a farm organization we have a responsibility to farmers and to the public to develop farm programs which will provide adequate supplies at reasonable consumer prices yet still protect the farmer and insure him an adequate return for his labor and investment.

Budget Man Got Start In Office

By KARL R. BAUMAN

WASHINGTON, March 13 (AP)—The new boss of the federal budget started out as office boy in an accounting firm and wound up owning the business.

And since entering government service in 1953 Maurice H. Stans has added lustre to the story of the poor boy who makes good.

His only hobby, friends say, is big game hunting. And he's had no time for that in recent years.

Associates describe Stans as soft spoken, and a hard worker.

"I've never heard him raise his voice," one of them said today after President Eisenhower named Stans to succeed budget director Percival F. Brundage, who resigned.

A carefully, conservatively groomed man, Stans is on the handsome side. His hair is graying at the temples. He stands 3 feet 11 inches and is physically trim.

He descends from Belgian stock. His father, J. Hubert Stans, was a member of a poor family that immigrated into this country in 1880. The father became a band director and house painter in southern Minnesota.

Stans' mother was the daughter of Hubert Nyssen, also a Belgian immigrant who settled in southern Minnesota in 1870. Later he owned a brewery.

The new budget director was born in Shakopee, Minn., March 22, 1905—50 years ago come Saturday a week. He went to Chicago after high school and attended Northwestern University at night while working in the daytime. Later he did the same thing at Columbia University, in New York City.

He began his career in accounting as an office boy with Alexander Grant & Co. in Chicago in 1928. Ten years later he owned the firm. When he joined, it had about a half dozen employees. When he left it in 1953 it had 250 employees and was the tenth largest accounting firm in the country.

We are convinced that action to freeze price supports and acreage levels would be a disservice to both farmers and consumers of the nation.

"The traditional philosophy of North Carolina farmers," the statement continued, "has been to produce adequate supplies to meet the demands of the consuming public without price-depressing market gluts. We have long opposed minimum acreage on a farm, county, state or national basis, for under such arrangements no adjustments can be made to reduce supplies below certain points established by law but not tied to market demands."

GRIDER BOOTED

SALISBURY, N. C. (AP)—Lou Biacchi, star Catawba College quarterback for the last two seasons, will play no more football for the North State Conference school.

Coach Paul Biggers has dropped him from the team permanently. Biggers said Monday "insubordination and disregard for the instructions of an assistant coach" during the alumni-varsity game last Saturday brought about Biacchi's dismissal.

"It's an unfortunate situation, but I always back my coaches," said Biggers. Beyond that he did not wish to comment.

Biacchi, a former Marine, is from Berwick, Pa. He is a junior at Catawba.

Biggers said he believed Biacchi would finish the spring term at Catawba, but he did not know whether he planned to return to the school next fall.

5. INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS: "The editor should institute a training program which should perpetuate good journalism on the paper. There ought to be some definition of the responsibilities of the various staff members and a page editor system should be instituted.

"The paper ought to try to attain a consistent style and tone, and perhaps The Daily Tar Heel should try to compile a style book similar to those at other universities. The editor should be responsible for seeing that there is a certain amount of staff rapport, so that the paper, relying mainly on non-paid help, can function efficiently.

6. SPECIAL FEATURES "The Daily Tar Heel should try to attain a large Sunday paper, commensurate with the importance of Sunday papers on other dailies. There should be a "Topic of the Week" in both campus and international news, which should give the campus a picture of at least two problems of the campus and world.

"An addition of features on programs on campus, television, radio, movies, and in the Chapel Hill-Raleigh-Durham area would be helpful as a guide to what-to-do.

"These programs will be explained more fully in the future through The Daily Tar Heel and by talking to many students individually," Gans said.

"The editorship is a great responsibility and calls for leadership, experience, and courage. I feel that I can bring to the paper these qualities," Gans stated.

Writer Warns Of U.S. Losses To Communism

GREENVILLE, March 13 (AP)—A noted news analyst said Thursday that "if we lose Asia and Africa to communism, we will be stranded—economically stranded, politically contained, and surrounded in a military war."

Ernest KETA ETA ETA ET and Washington director of Newsweek, made the statement in a talk at East Carolina College's fifth annual World Affairs Institute.

Retired Navy Adm. Charles B. Mosen, expert on submarines and submarine warfare, also addressed the audience of students, staff members and guests.

Lindley stressed the importance of providing Asia and Africa with capital and technical aid, since Russia is also making a bid for their friendship and support.

"We have repeatedly underestimated the ability of Soviet leaders, their ambitions, and their ruthlessness," Lindley stated. To improve relationship with Russia, he advocated testing some form of arms control with insistence of "free-wheeling" inspection and attempting exploration of space as cooperative enterprise between the two nations.

Mosen said that within the next 25 or 30 years the submarine will be larger, capable of staying under water for longer periods, capable of going deeper, and faster, with a possible speed of 60 knots.

Nuclear power, he said, has had a tremendous effect upon recent developments. Underwater transport for cargo, and even for passengers, is being developed, he pointed out. Cargo submarines will help protect military supplies from aircraft and surface vessels, Mosen said.

He told the audience under-ice travel by submarine is now being perfected and will open up an enormous shoreline in Russia and thus enable us to offer a tremendous threat to the Soviet Union.

RADIO CLUB

Organizational plans for forming an amateur radio club and club station here will be discussed at a meeting today at 7:30 p.m. in Phillips Hall, Room 250.

Noted French Novelist Is Married

PARIS, March 13 (AP)—Francoise Sagan, precocious novelist and symbol of the mid-century's sophisticated youth, today married her dignified publisher, Guy Schoeller. She is 22, he 42.

The best-selling writer of sexy novels had plotted a secret wedding. But secrecy didn't last through the first chapter.

When she and the bridegroom arrived for the five-minute ceremony at a mayoralty office in a shabby section of Paris, bobbysoxers and press were waiting, despite her elaborate series of stratagems. The affair turned out to be one of the best publicized in months.

The stratagems had included telling reporters two days ago that the marriage would be next week, changing automobiles three times en route from her home, and entering the mayoralty through a back gallery.

Deputy Mayor Jean Loubet, standing before a white bust of Marianne, traditional symbol of the French republic, declared Francoise and Guy man and wife. Only a few guests were in the room—including the bride's brother, Jacques, and a publisher friend, Gaston Gallimard.

The couple then drove to the country home of Pierre Lazareff, publisher of the newspaper France-Soir, for a luncheon, and later returned to an apartment they have rented on the left bank. The honeymoon has been postponed until June when they will go to Saint-Tropez, scene of Bonjour Tristesse, the novel that first won Francoise fame.

Her three sexy novels, her script for a ballet with a daring bathroom scene and her fast automobile driving—that nearly killed her last year—have made her a symbol among France's fast-living youth.
