hearted support and cooperation. The job of next year's president of the student body is an awesome one, and only through the consolidated efforts of all the elements of the campus can we expect to adequately confront our problems.

Concluding his final statement, the Student Party candidate thanked the "many friends who have helped" in his campaign. He expressed his gratitude to "all of the other students to whom I have talked, for the courtesy and kindness that they have shown me. Whatever the outcome on Tuesday, I sincerely value their friendship."

Rules

"I have taken great pride in the great liberal tradition of our University and do not feel we should ever imitate small women's colleges and preparatory schools in imposing such strict rules.

Syd Shuford in concurring with the opinion of the other student leaders pointed out that the women's academic average was higher than the highest men's group. He added that he felt that the University should encourage freedom and scholastic excellence rather than punish the group that maintains the high academic standards.

dent union, better understanding among campus groups and improving the position of social fraternities.

"To tackle the problems on campus which deserve immediate attention and much hard work, we need a president who wants to work and an administration behind him which is unified and competent from the top posts down to committee members. We must recognize that solution to pressing problems like procuring a new student union and the elimination of the self-liquidating payment plan for the new men's dorms, will require unified and exhaustive work on the part of the president and his aides. Even with hard work satisfactory results cannot be guaranteed, but it is certain that little will ever be done unless student leaders work vigorously.
