Men's Honor Council Set-Up To Be Explained This Evening

By WYNDHAM HEWITT
All the men on campus will get a chance tonight to learn what the new organization of the Men's Honor Council is all about. This subject will be discussed in dormitory and fraternity meetings throughout the campus.

few months. Those meetings are aimed at trying to explain the new system and correcting past erroneous statements.

The Men's Honor Council stated that because of the debate and discussion and erroneous statements the student body as a whole does not have a clear view of the reorganized body.

Hugh Patterson, chairman of the Men's Honor Council said, "It is not only a student's privilege, but his responsibility to be informed on matters of Student Government with which he is directly concerned. It is my sincere desire that all students will see fit to attend these various meetings, for only in that way will our new jury system prosper."

Under the new system the Attorney General and his staff investigate the case and present it before the court. The innocence or guilt is decided by a jury of nine men. On this jury are two permanent jurors and seven appointed jurors. The Honor Council will decide the sentence of the violator after the jury has given their decision of guilt or innocence.

Patterson Selected To Write TR Pageant

Thomas M. Patterson, assistant director of the Carolina Playmakers and associate professor in the Department of Dramatic Art, has been commissioned to write the Theodore Roosevelt National Memorial Play to be presented this summer in North Dakota as part of the National Centennial Celebration of Theodore Roosevelt's birth.

According to Patterson, who has been a member of the University faculty since 1950, his principal problem in writing the play is not a lack of dramatic material, but rather a lack of time, since he has only two months to write a full-length play.

Patterson commented that the tentative title of the play, which is expected to open June 29 and which will run several summers, is "Old Four-Eyes," the frontiersman's nickname for Roosevelt.

"It was first used contemptuously, but it wasn't too long before the 'punkin lily' dude from the East had won considerable respect for himself and his nickname had become a term of endearment," Patterson explained.

The Theodore Roosevelt National Memorial Park and Badlands Association is producing the play, which will be staged in Burning Gulch near the little ghost town of Medora.

Patterson noted, "Roosevelt owned two ranches, one to the south of town and one to the north. The town was founded 1883 by the Marquis de Mores, who hoped to put the meat packers of Chicago out of business. As colorful a figure as the millionaire Frenchman was, it was young, bespectacled, asthmatic Theodore Roosevelt who left his mark on the Badlands," he added.

The play will tell the story of Roosevelt's ranching days in the Badlands of Dakota, where he took an active part in bringing law and order to the last great refuge of the horse thief and the cattle rustler.

Majority Oppose New Rules At Residence Council Meet

By STAN BLACK

The Women's Residence Council held an open meeting last night in Graham Memorial in order that the students might express their opinions on the proposed rules changes for freshman women. A number of student leaders, both men and women, spoke on the changes, in a ratio of about two to one against them.

Lillian Shannonhouse, president of WRC and moderator of the discussion, began with a general statement of the Residence Council's position on the changes. She said that the rules are "not to restrict the girls," but rather to help them to "ease into" University life. It was pointed out in rebuttal to this argument that the freshmen women entering Carolina have always been of high intelligence and maturity.

Al Goldsmith, student legislator and former UP floor leader, remarked that freshmen women have continually had an outstanding scholastic average. He stated that he was neither for nor against the measures on an absolute basis, but that he disagreed with the view that there are existing academic or social reasons for many of them. He suggested that the 11-30 lights section and the closed study section be struck from the rules because the lights rule was clearly unenforceable and the closed study rule would prevent the freshmen from attending the many cultural and educational programs that are strong points of the University's educational opportunities.

Julia Ann Crater, past president of WRC, pointed out that the proposed changes have been under two year's thoughtful consideration by the Residence Council and the Dean of Women's office, which assists in an advisory capacity. Stating that most girls come from strict environments into the University, she felt that the rules could serve as "guideposts" to proper conduct for entering freshmen, whom she compared to "puppies needing some leash."

Ann Bachman, who is a senior history major from Baltimore, Md., said that, on the contrary, most girls have more freedom at home than they would have under the new rules. Along the same lines Francis Reynolds, former chairman of the Women's Athletic Assn., brought out the fact that there was a basic conflict between the strict rules system and the more liberal attitude based on the responsibility and maturity of the freshman women.

Don Furtado, student body president, agreed with WRC that there should be equality under rules of Nursing students and other freshmen women, but that we should not "regress," but rather tend toward more student freedom. Sonny Evans, former president, stated that the rules seem to work for a better "tradition of study," but in reality they would only undermine the Honor System through obvious frequent violation. The changes were termed "restrictions rather than aids for adjustment" by Anthony Wolff, Daily Tar Heel columnist.

Student Council Report Lists Fourteen Cases

The Student Council has heard 14 cases to date this year, according to a report submitted by John Owens, clerk of the Student Council.

Twelve of the cases involved the Campus Code, and two involved appeals from lower courts concerning questions of constitutionality.

The Council tried violations involving: indecent exposure, larceny, public drunkenness and disorderly conduct, breaking and entering, and public property destruction.

In its decisions thus far, two students have been suspended from school; one for indecent exposure, and one for drunkenness and disorderly conduct involving breaking into a house. Two have been placed on probation, and three have been given official reprimands.

Out of the remaining Campus Code violations tried, three have been found not guilty, and two were dismissed for lack of evidence.

"In each case, the council has dealt with the problem of maintaining a proper student awareness of what the Campus Code entails, hoping to enforce and promote gentlemanly conduct at and away from the University," said Owens. In his report he went on to say that in the majority of cases tried, it was apparent that student's mistakes were not ones of a habitual nature, but pointed up a lack of leadership, immaturity or inexperience.

"In most instances, it was found that although students were somewhat aware of the details of the Campus Code; there still exists a definite need for a greater understanding and practice of gentlemanly conduct," he added.

Specifically, the Campus Code states that "Every student shall conduct himself as a gentleman at all times, and insofar as it may be appropriate, to see that his fellow students do likewise."
