

Taylor And Radford Win 1958 Tanner Award At Faculty Meet

The Tanner Award for "excellence in inspirational teaching" was announced today at a meeting of the University faculty, with prizes of $500 each going to Associate Professor George V. Taylor and Associate Professor Albert E. Radford who teach history and botany respectively.

Chancellor William B. Aycock revealed the 1958 winners of the award which is given each year by the children of the late Lola Spencer and Simpson Bobo Tanner.

The award is given for "recognition of excellence in inspirational teaching of undergraduate students, preferably with respect to their influence on first and second year students."

The faculty committee aiding in the selection of teachers for the award stated, "We are looking for teachers who, in the opinion of students and fellow teachers, have succeeded in their subjects unusually well; we need not inquire into the methods by which these excellent results are achieved. These methods are highly individual and probably are not subject to successful analysis."

Dr. Taylor, a native of Trenton, N. J., has taught at the University of Wisconsin and Michigan State College, and was graduated from Rutgers with his advanced degrees from Wisconsin.

Dr. Radford, a native of Augusta, Ga., was graduated from Furman University and received his Ph.D. degree in botany at UNC in 1948 and has been a member of the UNC faculty since that time.

This is the third year that the Tanner Award has been given. Winners in 1956 were Dr. Bernard Boyd, chairman of the Department of Religion, and associate professor of social science James R. Caldwell Jr.

The winners last year were William M. Geer, instructor in history and social science, and assistant professor David Bastie of the Department of Geology and Geography.

Chancellor Aycock made special mention of all six men who have been chosen for superior classroom teaching.

Provisions of the Tanner grant which serve to guide those who select the teachers are as follows: "Sole consideration, in the selection of qualified faculty members, is to be given to excellence in personal, classroom, or lecture room teaching. The emphasis is to be particularly upon influence and attainments of selected faculty members in the field of personal teaching as contrasted to other activities in which faculty members attain eminence, including research, authorship, compilations, public service, etc. . . . This is not to stipulate that such other activities shall bar faculty members from awards. Such other activities may extend the wholesome usefulness of an excellent teacher, but it is intended that the sole purpose of this Fund is to encourage excellence and inspirational personal teaching of undergraduate students by the faculty of the University."

Iranians

The brothers started their trip by going east from Iran through Afghanistan and Pakistan, and covered all the Asiatic countries with the exception of Communist China.

They were invited into Communist China, but did not go, when they were told by the American embassy in Hong Kong, where they were at the time, that if they went to China, they would not be allowed into the United States. The reason given was the fact that the U.S. does not extend diplomatic recognition to Communist China. This occurred at the time that six newsmen went into China contrary to State Department orders.

The Ommidivars said that they intended to go to China after they completed their tour of the rest of the world.
