

Tourists From State Ask For Jury Trial

Two North Carolina State College students caught sightseeing in Kenan Stadium Sunday night have asked for a jury trial on trespassing charges, police said yesterday.

Larry Dean Eady, 25, and Jacumin Ray, 21, were arrested while examining the football field. They were released on $50 bond each.

No date was set for the trial. Judge William S. Stewart told the boys the case will probably come up in December at Hillsboro.

Eady and Ray told police they had never seen beautiful Kenan Stadium and decided to ride to Chapel Hill to have a look at it, the arresting officers said.

Two years ago a large "S" was burned into the center of the field in Kenan Stadium. The scar has healed over for this season.

Saturday Carolina meets State in the opening game of the season.

VISITING BRITISH EDUCATOR AND WIFE—Sir Philip Morris and Mrs. Morris of the visiting delegation of British educators talk over their experiences at Chapel Hill. Sir Philip is vice chancellor of the University of Bristol, England.

Britons Visit UNC Campus

By PETE IVEY

Visiting British educators who came to Chapel Hill for three days of sight-seeing and exchange of opinions with faculty and others in the University of North Carolina arrived on the campus at one of the busiest times of the year — just as registration began for the Fall.

The visiting Britishers and their wives have followed a schedule which has included a tour of the campus, side trips to departments and schools in the University of special interest, and social occasions.

Sir Philip Morris, vice chancellor of the University of Bristol, for example, said he wanted to "duck out and see the television station in the University" — the WUNC-TV facility in the Communications Center at Swain Hall. Sir Phillip is an official of the British Broadcasting Company. He is leader and spokesman for the British delegation.

Sir George Paton, vice chancellor of the University of Melbourne, in Australia, is a lawyer and has taught law for 20 years. He lunched with Dean Henry P. Brandis of the UNC Law School.

Dr. E. Davies of the University of Wales was particularly interested in the organizational structure of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, for the University of Wales is in four institutions, geographically separated as the University of North Carolina is in three parts. He compared notes with Dean Alexander Heard, Vice President William Whyburn, and others.

Prof. F. G. Butler is a professor of English and was accordingly interested in the strong program of English and humanities instruction here.

Sir David Campbell, professor of materia medica at the University of Aberdeen, Scotland, was taken through the School of Medicine and the N. C. Memorial Hospital.

Professor W. F. K. Wynne-Jones expressed a special desire to look into the science phases of the University and he was escorted to both the new physics facility at Phillips Hall and the Department of Chemistry at Venable.

Twelve of the visiting educators were accompanied by their wives. Mrs. William C. Friday and Mrs. William B. Ayeock, wives of the president and the chancellor of the University, entertained at a coffee at the President's house on Wednesday.

During their stay the British were interviewed several times by news reporters and by radio and television people.

They were entertained at tea Wednesday evening by Governor and Mrs. Luther Hodges in Raleigh.

Last night they attended a dinner at the Morehead Planetarium, with members of the faculty who were especially concerned with facets of their interests. Afterwards, the British and their wives visited in the homes of several of the faculty members.

The visitors were provided with souvenirs of their visit: a map of Chapel Hill and the campus; a booklet of the Research Triangle; a copy of publication, "The Chancellor's Eye View" a copy of the University Report; and a copy of a book written by Dr. Archibald Henderson entitled "The Campus of the First State University." It was published by the University of North Carolina Press.

This morning the visitors go by

We Goofed Dept.

The Daily Tar Heel special issue for freshmen, published Sept. 10, contained an incorrect statement and an omission about the administration positions.

The issue listed Roy Holsten Jr. as working under Development Director Charles M. Shaffer. Holsten was appointed assistant to the dean of the Business Administration School, effective July 1.

Omitted in the list was Consolidated University Vice President William M. Whyburn.

The paper regrets the errors, according to co-Managing Editor Clarke Jones.

Chapel Hill Not Affected By Bus Strike

A walkout of drivers and terminal employees that has paralyzed bus operations in the northern divisions of the Atlantic Greyhound Corp. has left bus operations in Chapel Hill unaffected.

Head Station Agent H. C. Pearce of the local station, said yesterday that the only change has been in a greater number of persons being routed through Chapel Hill as the Trailways bus service attempted to handle passengers of both lines. Trailways is now running double buses in an attempt to handle the situation.

Pearce said he did not think that University students would have any trouble in either getting to or from home, except perhaps in the Henderson, Selma, Mt. Olive and Creedmoor areas of North Carolina which are served exclusively by Greyhound lines.

Service is being continued to the larger cities, both north and south, via Trailways.

Rosenstengel Books Given To University

UNC's School of Education has been presented with the professional library of the late Dr. W. E. Rosenstengel, a member of the faculty for 16 years.

Housed in a special section of the new Education School Library in Peabody Hall, the collection was presented by Mrs. Freda W. Rosenstengel, his widow.

The collection contains most of the better-know volumes on school administration and several series of bound periodicals along with numerous monographs on particular subjects.

Soon available to students at the University for research in school administration, it will be an aid for work in the areas of school buildings and finance.

Beginning his public school career in the state of Missouri, Dr. Rosenstengel rose to the position of school supervisor in the state of Missouri and later came to the University in 1942.
