

When Coach Earle Edwards' N. C. State football squad comes to call next Saturday, they will find a grimly determined bunch of Tar Heels waiting in Kenan Stadium. Two years in a row Carolina has been picked to beat State, and two years in a row the Pack has shown utter disregard for the experts by turning the tables on the Tar Heels.

In '56 State spoiled Jim Tatum's return to his alma mater by beating Carolina 26-6. Last year the Wolfpack upset the Heels 7-0, then went on to win the ACC crown. This year, once again, Carolina will no doubt be favored. Can State do it again? Maybe. But they have a tough row to hoe before coming out on top this Saturday. A revenge-minded squad with depth, experience, and proven ability tips the scales for the Tar Heels.

ONLY 3 STARTERS BACK

State returns only three of last year's starters to this year's team. Back are guard Bill Rearick, end Bob Pepe and fullback Don Hafer. The missing men are end John Collar, tackles Mike DeAngelis and Darell Dess (just released by the Washington Redskins), guard Frank Tokar, center Jim Odo, and quarterback Tom Katich. But the biggest problem and the toughest loss to take will be at the halfbacks. Gone are the touchdown twins, Dick Hunter and Dick Christy. It was Hunter who scored the only touchdown in last season's game and Christy who set it up.

Carolina's defensive corps face a strong test in this season opener as they must cope with the State multiple offense. The Pack runs from a T, split-T, wing-T, spread, and other formations calculated to keep the defense off balance. But this temporary disadvantage may be overcome by the Carolina shifting defense, which makes blocking assignments more difficult to carry out.

This contest will be the 48th encounter between the two schools. Through the years the Tar Heels have been victorious 34 times, and there have been seven ties. Last year's loss to the Wolfpack was only the sixth time in the long series that Carolina has come out on the short end of the score.

A few early injuries may hamper the Tar Heels some, although a good bench should make up for the losses. Halfback Daley Goff is out indefinitely with a twisted knee. Tackle Don Stallings, the heaviest man on the team at 250, will miss the opener due to a rib fracture. Soph halfback Sonny Folkemer is recovering from an earlier injury and may be ready to go this Saturday.

NON-PLAYING CO-CAPTAIN

Watching from the sidelines this Saturday will be one of the Carolina co-captains, Curtis Hathaway. Curt is through for the season as a result of a fractured arm sustained in last year's South Carolina contest.

Quarterback Jack Cummings and halfback Daley Goff, two of the teams top backs, were married over the summer. Cummings' game jersey turned out to be a freak, since his regular number 14 appears on the front but for some odd reason the number 13 is on the back.

NEW FACES

A number of hitherto unseen players who are now sophomores eligibility-wise promise to add strength to an already powerful squad. Fred Mueller looks like a starter at guard. John Schroeder is running second unit as an end. Both Rabe Walton, a halfback, Don Klochak, a fullback, and Bill Barker, an end, return to Carolina from the service this season and any one could be the surprise of the year. The last time Klochak wore a Tar Heel uniform, in 1954, he led the team in punting and was third in rushing.

Bishop And Scurlock Lead Strong Cross-Country Team

by BING SOMERS

Bishop and Scurlock. These two "name" runners, backed up by a bevy of others of lesser fame, will form the core of the 1958 Carolina cross country team which has set determined sights on whisking away its third straight conference title.

In 32 years Coach Dale Ranson has managed to take over half of the conference crowns. They've become almost as regular as Yankee pennants. Though almost all of the ACC teams have improved and "are gunning for us," this season foresees no exception to the Ranson rule.

The big loss from 1957 is Everett Whately, a wispy, mercurial runner who looked like he just crawled out of a coffin. His absence shouldn't be felt too much, however, for returning for their senior years are Bishop and Scurlock. It is they that cause Coach Ranson to proclaim the sunset and pet small dogs. They could finish one-two in any meet.

The slender, pitter-patting Wayne Bishop will be the finest runner in the conference provided he has completely shaken an old knee injury. And right behind him will be Carolina's ace track citizen, tall and angular Dave Scurlock. Though a great asset to any cross country team, Scurlock prefers to concentrate most of his running talents on the half mile.

Lurking behind these two is a triumvirate of talented runners in lettermen Howard Kahn and Cowles Liptert and sophomore Worth Sweet. The first two are already top notch performers and Sweet should blossom into one within the year.

Seniors Alex Coffin and Doug Hen-erson, who have lettered and should repeat, are tabbed for the sixth and seventh spots.

The eighth and last member looks like soph Box Foxworth who might advance higher if he ever gets mad.

The mop up crew currently includes only Fick Arthur and Bing Somers, both of whom might crack the starting team with effort and luck.

Booters Want More Support

This year's varsity soccer team would like nothing better than for Carolina students to come out and root for them during home games. Captain Jim Rattay, who holds the goalie position, urged students Wednesday to come out and root for the Tar Heel booters in their home games.

Powerful Squad

Rattay said that this year's team, barring bad injuries to key players, will be a power-packed squad, with even more offensive punch than last year's squad.

Increased attendance would give the team members a big boost Rattay said, as team spirit is already high.

"A crowd out there rooting for you gives everybody an extra lift," Rattay said.

Attendance Always Low

Attendance at home soccer games has always been low. Even on perfect days, the crowd that comes to root for the Tar Heels very rarely exceeds 50 or 60 persons. Poor attendance at soccer games doesn't apply solely for the University of North Carolina, however.

PROBABLE STARTER—Sonny Folkemer, 187-pound soph halfback from York, Pa., is a likely starter Saturday for Carolina when the Tar Heels battle State's Wolfpack in Kenan Stadium.

Tar Heels To Face Ten Tough Opponents In '58

A ten-game schedule, including games with every member of the ACC and three outsiders, is in store for the Carolina Tar Heels this season.

This Saturday State visits here for the season opener, a repeat from the last few seasons. The Wolfpack will come into the premier with two straight victories over the Tar Heels under their belts. The next week, Sept. 27, Clemson furnishes the opposition, and probably quite a lot of opposition at that. The experts are all saying that this game should decide the winner of the conference race early in the season. The game will be played in enemy territory, at Clemson, and the Tigers will be seeking to regain their prestige after last year getting thumped 26-0 at Chapel Hill.

A new opponent, Southern California, is on tap for Oct. 3 and the team travels all the way across the continent for this one. Game time is 11:00 p.m.

The Tar Heels return home Oct. 11 to face the speedy South Carolina Gamecocks. Last year the Heels whipped the Birds 28-6 before the home folks.

This season, Oct. 18, Maryland comes to Chapel Hill to try to prove last year's 21-7 upset over the Tar Heels was no fluke.

Wake Forest, who failed to win a single game last year, will play here on Oct. 25. Coach Paul Amen predicts improvement, but how much improvement will not be clear until later in the season.

The Tennessee Volunteers, who handed Carolina a 35-0 defeat last year (worst of the season), entertain the Heels on Nov. 1 at Knoxville.

Carolina travels to Williamsburg, Va., Nov. 8 to attempt to avenge a 20-13 upset at the hands of Virginia's Cavaliers last season.

Nov. 15 the Tar Heels go to South Bend for the resumption of an old series with Notre Dame. The Irish have been picked as tops in the nation by many pre-season prognosticators.

The home team returns to Chapel Hill for the season finale against arch-rival Duke. On Nov. 22 of last year Carolina upset the Devils 21-13 at Durham.
